PREFACE.

In the following Essay I have endeavoured to call attention to some points in the history of the English Bible which have been strangely neglected. The history of our Bible is indeed a type of the history of our Church, and both histories have suffered the same fate. The writers who have laboured most successfully upon them have in the main confined themselves to outward facts without tracing the facts back to their ultimate sources, or noticing the variety of elements which go to form the final result. As far as I know no systematic inquiry into the internal history of our Authorised Version has yet been made, and still no problem can offer greater scope for fruitful research. To solve such a problem completely would be a work of enormous labour, and I have been forced to content myself with indicating some salient points in the solution, in the hope that others may correct and supplement the conclusions which I have obtained. It is at least something to know generally to what extent Tyndale and Coverdale made use of earlier versions, and to be able to refer to their sources most of the characteristic readings of Matthew's New Testament and of the Great Bibles¹.

Even in the external history of our Bible much remains to be done. It seems scarcely credible that adequate inquiry will not shew from what presses Tyndale's New Testament of 1535, Coverdale's Bible of 1535 and Matthew's Bible of 1537 proceeded. And it is impossible not to hope that Mr Brewer's re-

¹ Perhaps I may be allowed to mention one or two collations which would certainly furnish some valuable results.

⁽²⁾ A collation of Tyndale's Testaments of 1534 and 1535 with the New Testament in Matthew's Bible of 1537.

⁽³⁾ A collation of Tyndale's Pentateuchs of 1530 and 1534 with Matthew's Bible 1537, for which Mr Offor's MS. in the British Museum would be available as a verification (see p. 270, n.).

⁽⁴⁾ A collation of numerous select passages in the Great Bibles of 1539, April 1540, and November 1540, with a view to ascertaining how far the reaction in the last text extends, and whether it can be traced to any principle.

searches may yet bring to light new documents illustrating the vacillating policy of Henry VIII. as to the circulation of the vernacular Scriptures.

It does not fall within my province to criticise other histories. I have used Mr Anderson's Annals of the English Bible, and the Historical Account prefixed to Bagster's Hexapla (to which Mr Anderson does scant justice) with the greatest profit, and I desire to express generally my obligations to both essays. If I differ from them silently on any points I do so purposely, and in some cases I have even felt obliged to point out errors in them which were likely to mislead.

Absolute accuracy in an inquiry of so wide a range seems to be impossible, and every one who is conscious of his own manifold mistakes would gladly leave the mistakes of others unnoticed; but when writers like Mr Hallam and Mr Froude misrepresent every significant feature in an important episode of literary history, it seems necessary to raise some protest. Their names are able to give authority to fictions, if the fictions are unchallenged; and thus most unwillingly I have felt bound to examine Mr Froude's account of the English Bible in detail, and earnestly wish that the other parts of his narrative may prove more trustworthy when they are subjected to a similar process¹.

No apology, I trust, will be needed for the adoption of our ordinary orthography in quotations from the early versions; and the extreme difficulty of revising proofs by the help of distant libraries must be pleaded as an excuse for more serious errors.

What I have done is for the most part tentative and incomplete, and many points in the history of the Bible are left wholly unnoticed. If my leisure would have allowed I should have been glad to examine the changes in the headings of the chapters and the marginal references, both before and after 1611, for their history involves many details of great interest. One question however in connexion with the Authorised Version I have purposely neglected. It seemed useless to discuss its revision. The revision of the original texts must precede the revision of the translation, and the time for this, even in the New Testament, has not yet fully come.

¹ One example of this contagiousness of error, which is a fair specimen of a very large class, falls under my notice as these sheets are passing through the press. 'Tyndale,' writes Mr Smiles, 'unable to get his New 'Testament printed in England, where its perusal was forbidden [?], 'had the first edition printed at Antwerp in 1526....A complete edition 'of the English Bible, translated partly by Tyndale and partly by 'Coverdale, was printed at Hamburgh in 1535; and a second edition, 'edited by John Rogers, under the name of Thomas Matthew, was 'printed at Marlborow in Hesse in 1537....Cranmer's Bible, so called 'because revised by Cranmer, was published in 1539-40.' Huguenots, p. 15, and note. London, 1867. Neither the first nor the second edition of Tyndale's New Testament was printed at Antwerp. The Bible of 1535 was not partly translated by Tyndale; and no competent bibliographer at present assigns it to the Hamburgh press. Matthew's Bible was in no sense a second edition of Coverdale's, of which, indeed, two editions were published in 1537, and the place where it was printed is as yet uncertain. 'Cranmer's Bible' was not revised by Cranmer, and the editions of 1530 and 1540 are quite distinct. With that of 1539 Cranmer had nothing to do till after it was printed. Thus every statement in the quotation is incorrect. Lewis' History has, I fear. much to answer for; but it is unpardonable to use it without verification.

But however painful the sense of incompleteness and inaccuracy in such an essay as this must be, it has this advantage, that it bears witness almost on every page to the kindness of friends. It would have been far more imperfect than it is if I had not been allowed every facility for using the magnificent collections of Bibles in the British Museum, the University Library at Cambridge, and the Baptist College at Bristol. For this privilege and for similar acts of courtesy my warmest thanks are due to the Rev. H. O. Coxe, Bodley's Librarian at Oxford, Mr Bradshaw, University Librarian at Cambridge, Mr Bullen of the British Museum, the Rev. Dr Gotch, Principal of the Baptist College, Bristol, Mr Aldis Wright,

Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge, Mr. Fry Cotham, Bristol, and the late Rev. Dr Milman, Dean of St. Paul's.

INTRODUCTION.

THEN the boy sprang up from his knees, and ran, Stung by the splendour of a sudden thought, And fetched the seventh plate of graven lead Out of the secret chamber, found a place, Pressing with finger on the deeper dints, And spoke, as 'twere his mouth proclaiming first, 'I am the Resurrection and the Life.'

Whereat he opened his eyes wide at once, And sat up of himself, and looked at us; And thenceforth nobody pronounced a word: Only, outside, the Bactrian cried his cry Like the lone desert-bird that wears the ruff, As signal he were safe, from time to time.

INTRODUCTION.

THERE is a famous saying, which dates from The History of verthe times of persecution, that 'the blood of Martyrs nacular 'is the seed of the Church.' It may be added in Holy Scripthe like spirit, that the voice of Holy Scripture history of is the spring and measure of individual faith. Both faith. statements require to be modified in their application; but it remains generally true that the society which is founded by human devotion and labour, is quickened in its several members by the influence of the Word. So it is that the history of the vernacular Scriptures is in a great measure the history of personal faith. A people which is without a Bible in its mother tongue, or is restrained from using it, or wilfully neglects it, is also imperfect, or degenerate, or lifeless in its apprehension of Christian Truth, and proportionately bereft of the strength which flows from a living Creed.

Versions the first work in the early spread of Christianity to new nations.

In the first ages of the Church the translation of the Scriptures followed immediately on the introduction of Christianity to a nation of a new language. When the Gospel spread eastwards, a Syriac translation of the New Testament was one of the first monuments of its power. When it spread westwards, a Latin version preceded, as far as we know, all other literary efforts of the African Church. Ulfilas, the second bishop of the Goths, gave them the Scriptures in their own language. Miesrob, the framer of the Armenian alphabet, was the translator of the Armenian Bible; and the Slavonic version was due in part at least to the two brothers, Cyrillus and Methodius, who first reduced the Slavonic dialect to writing. The history of the Æthiopic and Egyptian Scriptures is probably similar, though it is more obscure; and it is most significant, that of these ancient versions, the greater part survive substantially the same in the public services of the nations which occupy the places of those for whom they were originally composed.

The action of this law necessarily suspended for a time among the Northern nations.

The original versions of Holy Scripture remain, but all else is changed. If we fix our eyes on the west only, we see the new-won empire of the Church desolated almost as soon as it was gained, by successive hordes of barbarian invaders, out of whom she was destined in the Providence of God to shape the forefathers of modern Europe. In less than ten years, after Jerome completed his version of the Old Testament from the Hebrew (A.D. 400-404), Alaric took Rome (A.D. 410). Thenceforward a fresh work was to be achieved by Christianity, and by a new method. For a time the normal processes of Christianity were in abeyance: organization prevailed over faith. These new races were to be disciplined by act before they could be taught by the simple word. Thus the task of the translation of Scripture among the northern nations was suspended. The Latin Vulgate sufficed for the teachers, and they ministered to their congregations such lessons from it as they could receive.

But as soon as society was again settled, the The first Northern old instinct asserted itself, and first, which is a versions in England. It is in the eighth century, the Psalms were rendered into Anglo-Saxon; and about the same time, Bede, during his last illness, translated the Gospel of St John.

The narrative of the completion of this work $\frac{Bede trans-}{lates\ St}$ is given by an eye-witness, Cuthbert, a scholar of $\frac{John's}{Gosfel}$.

Bede, in a letter to a fellow-scholar, and is in itself so beautiful a picture of the early monastic life, that it may be quoted in abstract. Bede had been ill for some weeks. About Easter (A.D. 735), he felt that his end was approaching, and looked forward to it with ceaseless gratitude, 're-'ioicing that he was counted worthy thus to suffer.' He quoted much from Holy Scripture; and one fragment of Saxon poetry, which he recited and may have composed, was taken down by Cuthbert1. But he was chiefly busy with two English translations of Excerpts from Isidore, and of the Gospel of St John. Ascension-day drew near. His illness increased, but he only laboured the more diligently. On the Wednesday, his scribe told him that one chapter alone remained, but feared that it might be painful to him to dictate. 'It is 'easy,' Bede replied, 'take your pen and write 'quickly.' The work was continued for some time. Then Bede directed Cuthbert to fetch his little treasures from his casket (capsella), 'pepper, ker-

^{&#}x27;more prudent of thought than

'after his death.'

'chiefs (oraria) and incense,' that he might distribute them among his friends. And so he passed the remainder of the day till evening in holy and cheerful conversation. His boy-scribe at last found an opportunity to remind him, with pious importunity, of his unfinished task: 'One sentence, dear 'master, still remains unwritten.' 'Write quickly,' he answered. The boy soon said, 'It is completed 'now.' 'Well,' Bede replied, 'thou hast said the 'truth: all is ended. Take my head in thy hands. 'I would sit in the holy place in which I was 'wont to pray, that so sitting I may call upon my 'Father.' Thereupon, resting on the floor of his cell, he chanted the Gloria, and his soul immediately passed away, while the name of the Holy Spirit was on his lips¹.

In the next century Alfred prefixed to his laws Other old a translation of the Ten Commandments, and a translafew other fragments from the book of Exodus: and is said to have been engaged on a version of the Psalms at the time of his death (A.D. 901). In the tenth century, or a little later, the four Gospels were translated apparently for public use; and two interlinear translations, probably of an earlier date, into other English dialects, are preserved in Latin Manuscripts, which shew at least individual zeal¹. Of the Old Testament, the Pentateuch, Joshua, Judges, Esther, and parts of other books were translated about the tenth century. All these translations, with the possible exception of Bede's, were only secondary translations from the Latin, but none the less they reveal the thoughts with which men's hearts were stirred. And there was no hindrance to their execution. On the contrary, the number of the labourers who took part in the work shews that it was of wide popularity.

A pause followed.

But the effort was as yet premature. England had still to receive a new element of her future strength; and for her the time of discipline was not over. The Norman invasion, which brought with it the fruits of Romanic thought and culture, checked for a while the spontaneous development of religious life. Nevertheless fragmentary trans-description of the MSS. of the common Anglo-Saxon Version; nor yet with any general account of the relation in which the several copies stand to one another. In this respect Thorpe's edition is most unsatisfactory.

¹ One of these noble MSS. is in the British Museum (the Lindisfarne (St Cuthbert's) Gospels, Cotton, Nero, D. IV.); and the other is in the Bodleian (the Rushworth (Mac Regol's) Gospels, Bodl. D. 24). I am not acquainted with any satisfactory

lations of Scripture into Norman-French shew that the Bible was popularly studied, and in the end the nation was richer by the delay. Nor may it be forgotten even in this relation that the insularity of the people furthered its characteristic growth; for while it remained outside the Roman empire yet it shared in the spiritual strength which came at that time from an intimate union with the Roman See. Thus the nation preserved throughout its progress the features of its peculiar constitution, and at the same time was brought within the influence of Catholic discipline and sympathy. It would be out of place to follow out here the action and reaction of these special and general powers upon the English type of mediæval Christianity; but the recognition of their simultaneous working is necessary for the understanding of the history of the English Bible. For three centuries they acted with various and beneficent results. At length in the 14th century the preparatory work The Papal of the Papacy was ended and its dissolution com- of Europe menced. The many nations and the many churches in 14th began from that time to define their separate peculiarities and functions. The time of maturity was now ready to follow on the time of tutelage: a free development was sufficiently prepared by a long discipline1.

The history of the Eng-lish Bible i. external:

It is then at this point that the history of the English Bible properly commences, a history which 2. internal, is absolutely unique in its course and in its issue. And this history is twofold. There is the external history of the different versions, as to when and by whom and under what circumstances they were made; and there is the internal history which deals with their relation to other texts, with their filiation one on another, and with the principles by which they have been successively modified. The external history is a stirring record of faithful and victorious courage: the internal history is not less remarkable from the enduring witness which it bears to that noble catholicity which is the glory of the English Church.

Gospels and the Acts; and the 'Sowlehele' (c. 1250). These, though they paved the way for translations of the Bible, cannot be reckoned among them.

No notice has been taken of the metrical paraphrases and summaries of parts of Scripture, as that of Cædmon († c. 680) on parts of Genesis, Exodus, and Daniel; of Orm (c. 1150) on the

CHAPTER I.

THE MANUSCRIPT BIBLE.

THE external history of the English Bible may I. External History. Two periods: length, the first extending from the beginning of (1) 1380—1525; (2) Wycliffe's labours to the publication of Tyndale's 1525-1611. New Testament in 1525, the second from that date to the completion of our present received version in 1611. The first of these will be the subject of the present chapter.

It has been already said that the 14th century (1) First period, was the first stage in the dissolution of the medi-Manuscript corruption of the higher clergy, and the growth of independence in the masses of the people. Both facts favoured an appeal from custom and tradition to the written and unchanging Word. Moreover the last great progressive effort for the restoration of the Church—the establishment of the mendicant orders-had failed, but not before the people had been roused by the appeals which were addressed to them. In England the crisis was keenly felt. Men turned with intense longing to the Bible, and in the first instance naturally to the Psalter, which has been in every age the fresh spring of hope in times of trial. No less than three versions of this, dating from the first half of the 14th century, have been preserved. But the work of translation did not long stop here. The years from 1345 to 1349 were full of calamities—pestilence and famine and war-which seemed to men already deeply stirred by the sight of spiritual evils to portend the end of the world. Other commotions followed which shewed the wide-spread disorganization of society. In France there was the terrible rising of the Jacquerie (1358); in Italy the momentary triumph and fall of Rienzi (1347-1354); a great schism (1378-1417) divided the forces of the Church; and Adrianople became (1360) the capital of a Turkish Empire in Europe built on the ruins of a Christian power.

The beginning of Wycliffe's translation. It was shortly after this time that Wycliffe, who had already written his Last Age of the Church (1356), began his labours on the Bible by a translation of the Apocalypse. This was followed by a translation of the Gospels with a commentary, CHAP. I. and at a later time by versions of the remaining books of the New Testament with a fresh rendering of the Apocalypse, so that a complete English New Testament was finished about 1380. To this New Tesa version of the Old Testament was soon added. which appears to have been undertaken by a friend of Wycliffe's, Nicholas de Hereford. The original manuscript of Nicholas is still preserved in the Bodleian, and offers a curious memorial of his fortunes. For having incurred the displeasure of his superiors, he was cited to appear in London in 1382, to answer for his opinions. He was excommunicated, and left England shortly afterward, breaking off his translation in the middle of Baruch (iii. 20), where the manuscript ends abruptly. The OLD TESwork was afterwards completed, as it is supposed, by Wycliffe, who thus before he died in 1384 had the joy of seeing his hope fulfilled and the Scriptures circulated in various forms among his countrymen.

Like the earlier Saxon translations, Wycliffe's From the translation was made from the Latin Vulgate, and Vulgate. from the text commonly current in the 14th century, which was far from pure. It was also so exactly literal that in many places the meaning

CHAP. was obscure. The followers of Wycliffe were not - blind to these defects, and within a few years after his death a complete revision of the Bible was undertaken by John Purvey, who had already become notorious for his opinions, and had shared in the disgrace of Nicholas de Hereford1.

Purvey's account of his work.

Purvey has left, in a general Prologue, an interesting account of the method on which he proceeded in his revision, which is marked by singular sagacity and judgment. He had, as will be seen, clear conceptions of the duties of the critic and of the translator, and the comparison of his work with Wycliffe's shews that he was not unable to carry out the design which he formed. After enumerating several obvious motives for undertaking his task, he continues: 'For these reasons 'and other, with common charity to save all men 'in our realm, which God will have saved, a simple 'creature [so he calls himself] hath translated the 'Bible out of Latin into English. First this simple 'creature had much travail with divers fellows and 'helpers to gather many old bibles and other docferent in character. Both translations contain the interpolations in the books of Samuel, e.g. 1 Sam. v. 6; x. 1, &c.

I can find no trace in Bentley's collations of English MSS. of the Vulgate. The clause is omitted by Wycliffe, as by many Latin MSS.

As might be expected the revised text displaced the original version, and in spite of its stern proscription in a convocation in 1408 under the influence of Archbishop Arundel², it was widely circulated through all classes till it was at last superseded by the CHAP. printed versions of the 16th century¹.

But this first triumph of the English Bible was not won without a perilous struggle. One or two contemporary notices of the state of feeling over which it was achieved and of that again out of which it sprung are of deep interest. Thus a Dangers of scholar writes when asked to teach the ignorant the contents of the Gospel: 'Brother, I know well 'that I am holden by Christ's law to perform thy 'asking, but natheless we are now so far fallen 'away from Christ's law, that if I would answer to 'thy askings I must in case undergo the death; and 'thou wottest well that a man is beholden to keep 'his life as long as he may2'.' 'Many think it amiss,' says Wycliffe, 'that men should know Christ's 'life, for then priests should be shamed of their

The translation included all the Apocryphal Books except 2 Esdras. The Epistle to the Laodicenes was not included in Wycliffe's or Purvey's translation, but was added afterwards in some MSS. The texts of the original translation and of the revision are generally uniform.

It is scarcely necessary to add that Sir T. More's statement that 'the Holy Bible was translated [into English] long before Wycliffe's days' is not supported by the least independent evidence. He may have seen a MS. of Wycliffe's version, and (like Lambert, see p. 29) have miscalculated the date. Bonner (for instance) had a copy, and there was a fine one at the Charterhouse. See p. 24. Compare Tyndale's Answer to More, иг. р. 168.

'One comfort,' he adds, 'is of 'knights, that they savour [understand] much the 'Gospel, and have will to read in English the Gospel of Christ's life'.' But the fear of death and the power of enemies could not prevail against the Spirit in which the work was wrought.

Spirit of reader and writer.

'Christian men,' one says, 'ought to travail 'night and day about text of holy writ, and namely 'the Gospel in their mother tongue, since Jesus 'Christ, very God and very man, taught this Go-'spel with His own blessed mouth and kept it 'in His life2.' 'I beseech and with all my heart 'pray them that this work read,' writes Wycliffe, in the preface to his Harmony of the Gospels, 'that 'for me they pray the mercy of God, that I may 'fulfil that is set in the draught [translation] of 'this book, and that he at whose suggestion I 'this work began, and they that this work read, 'and all Christian men with me, through doing 'of that that is written in this book, may come 'together to that bliss that never shall end'.' And Purvey when he revised Wycliffe's work knew well what was required of the interpreter of Scripture. CHAP. 'He hath need to live a clean life and be full devout 'in prayers, and have not his wit occupied about 'worldly things that the Holy Spirit, Author of 'wisdom and knowledge and truth, dress him in 'his work and suffer him not for to err.....By this 'manner,' he concludes, 'with good living and great 'travail men may come to true and clear translating 'and true understanding of Holy Writ, seem it never 'so hard at the beginning. God grant to us all 'grace to ken well and keep well Holy Writ and

'suffer joyfully some pain for it at the last'.'

The last words were not allowed to remain without fulfilment. As long as the immediate influence of Wycliffe lasted the teaching of his followers was restrained within reasonable bounds. Times of anarchy and violence followed, and spiritual reform was confounded with the destruction of society. The preachers of the Bible gave occasion to their enemies to identify them with the enemies of order; and the re-establishment of a strong government led to the enactment of the statute De hæretico comburendo (2 Hen. IV.), which The act de was soon put in force as a powerful check on haretico heresy. It is impossible to determine whether the rendo.

The convocation of Oxford, 1408.

In a convocation of the province of Canterbury held at Oxford under Archbishop Arundel in 1408, several constitutions were enacted against the party of the Reformation. The one on the use of the vernacular Scriptures is important both in form and substance. 'It is a dangerous thing,' so it runs, 'as witnesseth blessed St Jerome, to 'translate the text of the holy Scripture out of 'one tongue into another; for in the translation 'the same sense is not always easily kept, as the 'same St Jerome confesseth, that although he were 'inspired (etsi inspiratus fuisset), yet oftentimes 'in this he erred; we therefore decree and or-'dain that no man hereafter by his own authority '(auctoritate suâ) translate any text of the Scrip-'ture into English or any other tongue, by way 'of a book, pamphlet, or treatise; and that no 'man read any such book, pamphlet or treatise, 'now lately composed in the time of John Wycliffe

'in whole, publicly or privately, upon pain of 'greater excommunication, until the said transla-'tion be approved by the ordinary of the place 'or, if the case so require, by the council pro-'vincial. He that shall do contrary to this shall 'likewise be punished as a favourer of heresy and 'error1,'

Four years after came the insurrection and The Wydeath of Sir John Oldcastle. A new and more survives stringent act was passed against heresy (2 Hen. V.), of the and the Lollards as a party were destroyed. But the English Bible survived their destruction. The terms of the condemnation under Archbishop Arundel were explicit, but it was practically ineffectual. No such approbation as was required, so far as we know, was ever granted, but the work was still transcribed for private use; and the manuscripts are themselves the best records of its history2.

² Two names however are connected too closely with Wycliffe to be omitted altogether. John of Gaunt vigorously supported Wycliffe in his endeavours to circulate an English version of the Bible, and after his death successfully opposed a Bill brought into the House of Lords, 1300, to forbid the circulation of the Scriptures in English (Hist. Acc. p. 33). Anne of Bohemia also, according to the testimony of Archbp, Arundel, 'constantly studied the four

Wycliffite
Versions.

Of about one hundred and seventy copies of the whole or part of the Wycliffite versions which have been examined, fifteen of the Old Testament and eighteen of the New belong to the original version. The remainder are of Purvey's revision, which itself has in some very rare cases undergone another partial revision. Of these not onefifth are of an earlier date than Arundel's condemnation. The greater part appear to have been written between 1420 and 1450; and what is a more interesting fact, nearly half the copies are of a small size, such as could be made the constant daily companions of their owners. Others again are noticeable for the rank of those by whom they were once possessed. One belonged to Humphrey, the 'good' duke of Gloucester: another to Henry VI, who gave it to the Charterhouse: another (apparently) to Richard III; another to Henry VII; another perhaps to Edward VI; and another was presented to Queen Elizabeth as a birth-day gift by her chaplain. There are vet other copies with interest of a different kind. One probably was that of Bp. Bonner: another records

1 But it must be observed that in spite of the wide circulation of the English Version the Latin Vulgate remained the Bible of those who could read, just as afterwards in Cranmer's time the interesting memorial of this remains. The 'Persones Tale' in Chaucer (c. 1380-1390) abounds in passages of the Bible in English. The Latin 'catchword' is very rarely given; and in no one case have I observed a real coincidence with either of the Wycliffite versions. On the contrary, the renderings differ from them more than might have been expected in contemporary versions of the same Latin text:

and the same text (e.g. Acts iv. 12) is turned differently in different places. One or two examples are worth quoting.

Alas! I caitif man who shall deliver me fro the prison of my caitif body? (Rom. vii. 24).

An avaricious man is the thraldome of idolatrie (Eph. v.

Go, sayd Jesu Crist, and have no more will to do sinne (John viii. II).

So Foxe wrote in 1563, and after three centuries the contrast is still to our sorrow.

Influence of the study the 16th century.

But meanwhile a momentous change had passof Greek in ed over Western Europe. 'Greece,' in the striking language of an English scholar, 'had risen from 'the grave with the New Testament in her hand;' and the Teutonic nations had welcomed the gift. It had been long felt on all sides that the Latin Bible of the mediæval Church could no longer satisfy the wants of the many nations of a divided world. Before the end of the 15th century Bibles were printed in Spanish, Italian, French, Dutch, German and Bohemian; while England as yet had only the few manuscripts of the Wycliffite versions. But like Wycliffe's, these were only secondary versions from the Vulgate. The Hebrew text of the Old Testament was published as early as 1488, though very few except Jews could use it; but the Greek text of the New Testament was not yet printed. Scholars however were being duly trained for the work of direct translation. The passionate declamation then current against Hebrew and Greek shew that the study of both was popular II. and advancing. And England, though late to EXTERNAL begin, eagerly followed up the 'new learning.' HISTORY.

From 1509 to 1524 Erasmus was Professor of Greek at Cambridge, and, as appears probable, it was the fame of his lectures which drew there William Tyndale about the year 1510, to whom it has been allowed more than to any other man to give its characteristic shape to our English Bible. And the man, as we shall see, was not unworthy of the glorious honour for the attainment of which indeed he lived equally and died.

§ I. TYNDALE.

With Tyndale the history of our present Eng- I. TYN-lish Bible begins; and for fifteen years the history of the Bible is almost identical with the history of Tyndale. The fortunes of both if followed out in detail are even of romantic interest. Of the early life of Tyndale we know nothing. He was born about 1484, at an obscure village in Gloucestershire, and 'brought up from a child,' as Foxe says, in the University of Oxford, where he was 'singuspending some time there, as we have noticed, he returned about 1520 to his native county as tutor in the family of Sir John Walsh of Little Sodbury. Here he spent two years, not without many controversies, in one of which he made his memorable declaration, that 'if God spared him life, ere many 'years he would cause a boy that driveth a plough 'to know more of the Scriptures than [the pope] 'did².' The boast was not an idle phrase. Erasmus had published the Greek Testament for the first time, with a new Latin version in 1516, before Tyndale left Cambridge, and he must have been acquainted with the effect which its introduction there had immediately produced³. At the same

I He studied in Magdalen Hall, called Grammar Hall from the labours of Grocyn, W. Latimer and Linacre there in favour of classical learning (Anderson, I. 26).

Mr Fry informs me that the MS. quoted in the Historical Account, p. 41 n., purporting to contain translations by Tyndale ('W. T.') from the New Testament and dated 1502, was unquestionably a forgery. The MS. was afterwards burnt; but the fac-simile of a single page, for the sight of which I am indebted to Mr Fry, seems absolutely conclusive as to its spuriousness.

² Foxe, Acts and Monuments, v. 117. The second part of the answer is in an oblique form in Foxe, but the context shews clearly that the 'he' is the Pope and not the priest with whom Tyndale was talking.

roused to a lively faith by reading in Erasmus' edition, 1 Tim. i, 15, as he narrates in touching words in a letter addressed to Tunstal: Foxe, Acts and Monuments, IV. 635. Bilney's Latin Bible is still preserved with many passages marked, and among them the one on which he dwelt most in the night before his death. Anderson, I. p. 301.

It is not indeed unlikely, as has been pointed out by the author of the Historical Account (p. 44), that the saying of Tyndale given above was suggested by a phrase in the Exhortation of Erasmus, 'I would,' he writes. 'that the husbandman at the plough should sing something from hence [the Gospels and Epistles].'

1 Preface to Pentateuch, p. 306 (Park. Soc.).

² No phrase could more completely misrepresent Tyndale's character than that by which Mr Fronde has thought right to describe him at this time-'the young dreamer' (II. 30). Tyndale could not have been much less than forty years old at the time, and he was less of a 'dreamer' even than Luther. From the first he had exactly measured the cost of his work;

Munmouth, who was afterwards (1528) thrown into the Tower for the favour which he had shewn Tyndale and other reformers, has left an interesting account of his acquaintance with him in a petition which he addressed to Wolsey to obtain his release. 'I heard [Tyndale]' he writes

He begins to print his New Testament. 1525.

Tyndale's first place of refuge was Hamburgh. He remained there during the year 15248 and published, as it seems, the gospels of St Matthew and St Mark separately with marginal notes. In the next year he went to Cologne and there proceeded to print his first complete New Testament, the translation of which he had accomplished alone4.

3 Mr Anderson successfully disposes of the common tradition that he visited Luther at this time: I. pp. 45 ff. Luther indeed was otherwise engaged.

⁴ Fryth did not join him till 1526; and there is no evidence that either his amanuensis Rove. or Joy, if he was with him at the time, had any share in the translation. The date of the printing of the New Testament is established by the use of a woodcut as the frontispiece to St Matthew which was afterwards cut down and used in an edition of Rupert of Deutz, finished June 12, 1526. The rising of the pea- HISTORY. sants furnished a ready pretext to the lukewarm for confounding the new doctrines with revolutionary license. But Tyndale laboured on in silence, and ten sheets of his Testament were printed in quarto when his work was stopped by the intrigues of Cochlæus, a relentless enemy of the Reformation.

The expense, as he learnt, was defrayed by English merchants; and their design was only betrayed by their excess of confidence. But though Cochlæus was aware of the design, he could not for some time find any clue to the office where it was being executed. At last becoming familiar with the printers of Cologne while engaged on a book to be published there, he heard them in unguarded moments boast of the revolution which would be shortly wrought in England. being worked off, for speedy and secret distribution through England. He took immediate measures to secure the aid of the authorities of the city for checking the work. The printers were forbidden to proceed, but Tyndale and Roye taking their printed sheets with them escaped to Worms by ship. Cochlæus—it was all he could then do—warned Henry, Wolsey, and Fisher of the peril to which they were exposed, that so they might take measures 'to prevent the importation of the per'nicious merchandise.'

Tyndale finishes two editions at Worms.

Meanwhile Tyndale pursued his work under more favourable circumstances. The place to which he fled was already memorable in the annals of the Reformation. It was then not much more than four years since the marvellous scene when Luther entered Worms (1521) to bear witness before the Emperor. But within that time the city had 'be-come wholly Lutheran'.' So Tyndale found a safe retreat there, and prepared two editions of his New Testament instead of one. This octavo edition was finished in octavo, first. In a short epistle to the reader, which is placed at the end, the translator apologizes for 'the rudeness of the work' then first accomplished: 'Count it' he says 'as a thing not having his full 'shape, but as it were born afore his time, even as 'a thing begun rather than finished. In time to 'come, if God have appointed us thereunto, we will 'give it his full shape, and put out if ought be 'added superfluously: and add to, if ought be over-'seen through negligence: and will enforce to bring 'to compendiousness that which is now translated 'at the length, and to give light where it is required, 'and to seek in certain places more proper English, 'and with a table to expound the words which are 'not commonly used, and shew how the scripture 'useth many words which are otherwise understood of the common people: and to help with a decla-'ration where one tongue taketh not another.' Both editions reached England without any indication of the translator's name2 early in 1526; and, as might have been expected, the quarto edition first attracted attention, while for a short time the undescribed octavo escaped notice.

Lee's Letter to Henry VIII. Dec. 2, 1525.

Before the books arrived Henry VIII. had received a second warning of the impending danger from his almoner Lee, afterwards archbishop of York, who was then on the continent. Writing to the king from Bordeaux on Dec. 2nd, 1525, Lee says: 'Please your highness to understand that I

1 The quarto edition was commenced by Quentel. The octavo was printed by P. Schoeffer, the son of one of the first great triumvirate of printers. The same printer, it has been conjectured, completed the quarto; but of this there is no direct evidence. as the Grenville Fragment contains only sheets A-H, while A-K were printed by Quentel. There is not however any reasonable doubt that the quarto edition was completed about the same time as the first octavo, and therefore it seems likely that it was completed at Worms and by Schoeffer. Two editions, a large and a small, one with and one without glosses, made their appearance simultaneously in England. Three thousand copies of the first sheets of the quarto were struck off and six thousand is said to have been the whole number of New Testaments printed. Moreover it is not likely that Tyndale would allow the sheets which he rescued to lie idle. For specimens of the Glosses, see App. v.

² Tyndale's name was attached to the Parable of the wicked Mammon in 1527, and he there gives his reasons for printing his New Testament anonymously. In the revised edition (1534) his name was added.

I need not to advertise 'your grace what infection and danger may ensue 'hereby if it be not withstanded. This is the next 'way to fulfil your realm with Lutherans.' And then he adds, 'All our forefathers, governors of 'the Church of England, have with all diligence 'forbid and eschewed publication of English Bibles, 'as appeareth in constitutions provincial of the 'Church of England'...'

The account which reached Lee's ears had travelled far and was inaccurate in its details; but the swiftness with which it reached him is a proof of the interest which Cochlæus' discovery excited.

Another notice of Tyndale's translation which appears in the diary of a German scholar under August 1526 is more truthful and full of interest.

Reception of the Books in England.

The reception of the books in England answered to these anticipations. They were eagerly bought, and as eagerly proscribed and sought out for destruction. Sir T. More fiercely attacked the translation as ignorant, dishonest and heretical?.

EXTERNAL in vain. The tide was fairly flowing and it could not be checked. A formidable popular organization was ready in England to welcome the books and to spread them. Numerous agents were employed both in importing them from Holland and in circulating them. There is even something quaintly human in watching the spirit of the trader shewing itself in this sacred work. One John Tyball came with a friend to London (1526) to buy one of Tyndale's New Testaments. After giving some proof of their sincerity they shewed 'the 'Friar Barnes of certain old books that they had, 'as of the four Evangelists and certain epistles 'of Peter and Paul in English, which books the 'said Friar did little regard, and made a twit 'of it and said "a point for them! for they be "not to be regarded toward the new printed Testa-"ment in English; for it is of more cleaner "English." And then the said Friar Barnes de-'livered to them the said New Testament in 'English...and after...did liken the New Testament 'in Latin to "a cymbal tinkling and brass sound-"ing".' Thus by 1530 swiftly and silently six editions, of which three were surreptitious, were Nevertheless in translating the New Testa-so fierce and systematic was the persecution both now and afterwards, that of these six editions, numbering perhaps 15,000 copies, there remains of the first one fragment only, which was found about thirty years ago, attached to another tract2; of the second, one copy, wanting the title-page, and another very imperfect³; and of the others, two or three copies, which are not however satisfactorily identified4.

Two characteristic incidents will be sufficient CHAP. EXTERNAL to shew the strength and weakness of the popular movement to which the origin and circulation of > the translation was due. Among the first to receive a consignment of Tyndale's Testaments was Thomas Garret, curate of All Hallow's, Cheapside. When tidings of the importation were obtained by the government early in 1526, suspicion at once fell upon him. Wolsey searched 'in all London' for him, but found that he was 'gone to Oxford to 'make sale of [the books] there to such as he 'knew to be lovers of the Gospel,' for this was not his first labour of the kind. A messenger was despatched thither to apprehend him, but the timely warning of a friend gave him an opportunity of escaping. But 'after that he was gone 'a day's journey and a half he was so fearful that 'his heart would no other but that he must needs 'return unto Oxford.' He was immediately apprehended, but again escaped from custody and sought out the friend Dalaber, who has recorded

The 'lately born flock' was not ripe for the trial. Before many days were over Garret and Dalaber took a principal part in a public act of penance in company with Fryth and Taverner and Coxe and Udall and Ferrar and many others destined to play an important part in the coming struggle of the Reformation. One detail of their punishment was to throw a book into a fire kindled at Carfax. The procession passed away, the fire died out, the books were consumed, and such was the end of the first appearance of Tyndale's New Testament at Oxford1.

Meanwhile similar events were passing at Cam- The New bridge. The spirit of heresy had penetrated there at Cambridge and earlier and deeper than at Oxford. Bilney, Lati-London. mer, and Barnes, men of distinction in the University and not young students, were its represen-

EXTERNAL close of 1525 Barnes preached a sermon in which he criticized among other things the luxury of Wolsey. This personal attack gave force to the accusation against him, which after a little delay was laid before the Cardinal. The messenger who came early in February of the next year to search for books, when the search was made at Oxford, was again anticipated by private information. The books were placed carefully beyond his reach, but he arrested Barnes. With such an offender the process was short and simple. After he had appeared before the court the choice was left him of abjuration or the stake. A bitter struggle revealed his present weakness, and on the next Sunday in company with some German traders—'Stillyard men' -committed 'for Luther's books and Lollardy,' he performed a memorable penance in St Paul's1. 'The Cardinal had a scaffold made on the top of 'the stairs for himself, with six-and-thirty Abbots, 'mitred Priors and Bishops, and he in his whole 'pomp mitred, which Barnes spoke against, sat 'there enthronised. This singular plan for stopping the sale of the books having failed, Nix wrote three years afterwards in deep distress to archbishop Warham to obtain some more effectual interference in the

HISTORY.

The fears and wishes of Nix were probably shared by a large party in England, and ten days after he wrote an imposing assembly was convened by archbishop Warham, at which the errors of Tyndale and his friends were formally denounced, and a bill drawn up to be published by preachers. In this it was stated, among other things, that, in spite of the widespread feeling to the contrary, it was not part of the King's duty to cause the Scriptures to be circulated among the people in the vulgar tongue. And that he 'by the advice 'and deliberation of his council, and the agreement of great learned men, thinketh in his conscience 'that the divulging of this Scripture at this time 'in the English tongue to be committed to the 'people, should rather be to the further confu-'sion and distraction than the edification of their 'souls?' Thus in the very condemnation of the vernacular Bible, the general demand for it is acknowledged, and a translation is only deferred till a more convenient opportunity, which was nearer at hand than More or Tunstall could have ima-

Nor let the wick-'edness of these worldly men detain you from 'your godly purpose and promise.'

Thus the first battle for the Bible was being fought in England. Meanwhile the work had advanced one step further abroad. Very early in Progress of the same year Tyndale had continued his work by publishing separately translations of Genesis and Deuteronomy. In the following year all the Pentateuch. books of the Pentateuch were collected into a volume and furnished with a preface. rites (note on Ex. xxviii). For example, on Ex. EXTERNAL XXI. 37, he adds, 'Touch not the chalice nor the 'altar-stone, nor holy oil, and hold your hand out 'of the font.' On Ex. xxxvi. 5, he writes: 'When will the Pope say Hoo (hold!) and forbid 'to offer for the building of St Peter's church? 'And when will our spirituality say Hoo! and 'forbid to give them more land, and to make 'more foundations? Never until they have all.' Even Tyndale too could descend to a pleasantry like Luther. Thus on Ex. xxxii. 35, he remarks, 'The Pope's Bull slaveth more than Aaron's calf...' The tonsure is criticized Levit. xxi. 5, 'Of the 'heathen priests then took our prelates the ensam-'ple of their bald pates.' One grim touch of satire may be added, Deut. xi. 19, 'Talk of them '[the Lord's words] when thou sittest in thine 'house.' 'Talk of Robin Hood, say our prelates.'

The translation of Jonah, 1534.

Three years later (1534) the book of Jonah¹ with an important Prologue appeared, but no more of Tyndale's work on the Old Testament was published during his lifetime, except the 'Epistles from the Old Testament,' which were added to the revised edition of his New Testa- CHAP. ment. For in the midst of his constant perils EXTERNAL and anxieties from within and from without Tyndale found time to revise his New Testament carefully. The immediate occasion for the publication of his work was the appearance of an unauthorized revision in August 1534, by George Joye. The demand for the New Testaments which Joye's New appears to have slackened since 1530, was again so great that three surreptitious editions were printed at Antwerp in that year; and Joye undertook to revise the sheets of a fourth edition. In doing this he made use, as he says, of the Latin text, and aimed at giving 'many words their pure and 'native signification.' The title of the book is singularly affected¹, and the alterations were such

One copy only of this edition is known, which is in the Grenville Library in the British Museum.

It is not true, as is commonly said, that Joye 'expunged' the word 'resurrection' from his New Testament. It stands in such critical passages as Acts xvii. 18, 32; i. 22; iv. 2, &c.: I Cor. xv. 12, &c.; nor did Tyndale bring this charge against him, but that 'throughout Mat.

Still Joye does not avoid the word 'resurrection;' and if this were the only change, the particular substitution would be of little moment in the connexion where it occurs; but comparatively few paragraphs are left wholly untouched as far as I have examined the book. One continuous passage will exhibit Joye's mode of dealing with the text. The words in italics are variations from Tyndale:

(W. T. yet once more to the Christian reader, in the N. T. of 1534.) Thus in Matt. xxii. 23, 30, we read 'life after 'this;' xxii. 31, 'the life of 'them that be dead.' So also Luke xx. 27, 33, 36 (children of that life). John v. 29 is translated 'and shall come forth. 'they that have done good unto 'the very life, and they that 'have done evil into the life of 'damnation.' In John xi. 23, 24 the word 'resurrection' is retained. From these examples it is obvious that Joye's object was simply exegetical in the particular passages which he altered, and that he had no desire to expunge the idea or the word 'resurrection' from his version. Later writers have not dealt justly with him.

Several of the changes noticed are suggested by the Vulgate; others are due apparently only to a mistaken effort to obtain clearness: none mark a critical examination of the original. Tyndale's own work was ready in the November EXTERNAL of the same year. The text was not only revised, but furnished also with short marginal notes. Prologues were added to the several books1; the beginnings and endings of the lessons read in Church were marked; and a translation of 'the 'Epistles taken out of the Old Testament, which ' are read in the Church after the Use of Salisbury 'upon certain days of the year,' which include a large number of fragments from the Old Testament and the Apocrypha, classed together by Tvndale under one head?.

> On the relation of these Prologues to Luther's, see Chap. III. ² The relation of these 'Epistles' to the text of Tyndale's containing translations of the Old Testament will be noticed afterwards. The following is (I hope) an accurate list of them. Gen. xxxviii, 6-22; Ex. xii. 1-11; xx. 12-24; xxiv. 12-18; Lev. xix. 1-18; Num. xx. 2-13; 1 King's xvii. 17-24; xix. 2-8; Prov. xxxi. 10-31: Cant. ii. 1-14; Is. i. 16-19; ii. 1-5; vii. 10-15; xi. 1-5; xii. 1-6; xlix. 1-7; li. 1-8; liii. 1-12; lviii. 1-9; lx. 1-6; lxii. 6-12; Jerem. xvii. 13-18; xxiii. 6-8 (wrongly given xxxiii); Ezech. i. 10-13; xviii. 20-28; xxxvi. 23-28; Joel ii. 12-10; 23

In his reference to these, Mr Anderson is singularly unhappy. He omits six of the Chapters from which the passages are taken (he does not give the verses), and of those which he gives, six are wrong, from a confusion of x and v. He suppresses all the passages from the Apocrypha and converts Esther xiii. (apocryphal) into Esther viii. (canonical). He argues from the publication of these

One of the few copies of this edition which have CHAP. been preserved is of touching interest. Among EXTERNAL the men who had suffered for aiding in the circulation of the earlier editions of the Testament was Anne Boa merchant-adventurer of Antwerp, Mr Harman, who seems to have applied to Queen Anne Boleyn for redress. The Queen listened to the plea which was urged in his favour, and by her intervention he was restored to the freedom and privileges of which he had been deprived. Tyndale could not fail to hear of her good offices, and he acknowledged them by a royal gift. He was at the time engaged in superintending the printing of his revised New Testament, and of this he caused one copy to be struck off on vellum and beautifully Tyndale's work crowned at London and at Vilvorde.

The interest of the Queen in the work of Tyndale appears to have extended yet further 1: an edition of his revised New Testament, the first volume of Holy Scripture printed in England, appeared in the year in which she was put to death, and from the press of a printer with whom her party was connected 2. Tyndale, who suffered in the same year, may have been martyred before the book was finished, but at least he must have been cheered with the knowledge of its progress. He had worked for thirteen years an exile by foreign instruments, and now in his last moments

'underscoring in red ink of pas-'sages such as might be marked 'for devotional purposes,'of which Mr Plumptre speaks (Dict. of Bible, III. 1669 n.). It may have been 'bound in blue morocco' when it was presented to Anne Boleyn, as Mr Anderson says (I. 413), though it is very unlikely: the present binding is obviously of the last century.

The shield on the title page is filled with the arms of France and England quarterly. The first quarter is defaced, and the outline of the wood engraving below is mixed with the charge. The capitals are exquisitely illuminated throughout.

¹ The 'lady Anne' had at an earlier time had a perilous adventure from lending to one of her ladies a copy of Tyndale's Obedience of a Christian Man. The narrative is quoted in Tyndale's Works, I. p. 130.

² This was not T. Berthelet, as is commonly supposed, but J. Godfray. This fact has been ascertained beyond all doubt by Mr Bradshaw. The engraved border, on the evidence of which the work has been assigned to Berthelet, was used by Godfray before it passed into Berthelet's possession; and there is no evidence that Berthelet used it as early as 1536.

The edition ends with the significant words, 'God save the King, and all his well willers.' he was allowed to rejoice in the thought that his CHAP. labour had found its proper home in his own land. tvrdom.

It is impossible to follow in detail the circum- His marstances of Tyndale's betrayal and martyrdom, yet the story is well worth pondering over. Some of the life-like touches in Foxe's narrative bring out the singleness of the character of the man whom he worthily called 'for his notable pains and 'travail an apostle of England.' One work had absorbed all his energy, and intent on that he had no eye for other objects. The traitor by whose devices he was taken (1535) seemed to him, in spite of warnings, 'honest, handsomely learned 'and very conformable.' He even furnished him with money, 'for in the wily subtilties of this 'world he was simple and inexpert.' But in defence of himself Tyndale needed no counsel; even by an adversary he was called 'a learned, pious and good 'man:' his keeper and his keeper's daughter and others of his keeper's household were won over by him to his belief. His last prayer when fastened to the stake (Oct. 1536) witnessed equally to his

HISTORY.

While in prison Tyndale appears to have revised his New Testament once again for the press. This last edition contains one innovation in the addition of headings to the chapters in the Gospels and Acts, but not in the Epistles; and is without the marginal notes, which were added to the edition of 1534. But it is chiefly distinguished by the peculiarity of the orthography, which has received a romantic interpretation. Tyndale, as we have seen, had affirmed that 'he who followeth the 'plough' should in a few years have a full knowledge of the Scripture, and from the occurrence of such words as maester, faether, moether, stoone, in this edition it was concluded by a biographer that in his last years he adapted his translation to 'the 'pronunciation of the peasantry.' The conjecture seemed plausible and it is scarcely surprising that it has been transformed by repetition into an acknowledged fact. It is however not borne out by an examination of the book itself. Whatever may be the explanation of the orthography it is evident from its inconsistency that it was not the result of any fixed design. Nay more, there is not the least reason to suppose that some of the forms are provincial, or that the forms as a whole would make the language plainer to rustics. The headings too, EXTERNAL which have been also supposed to have been designed 'to help to the understanding of the sub-'iects treated of,' just fail when on that theory they would be most needed.

1 Two copies of this edition are known. That which I have used is in the University Library at Cambridge. The orthography in the Table of the four Evangelists and the Prologue to the Romans which follows (not displaced by the binder) offers no marked peculiarities. In sheet A we find aengell, waeye, faether, waere, saeyde, moether, aroese, behoelde, toeke, harde (heard) &c. &c. In B, maester, mother, moether, father, sayd (consistently), favth, stoede, &c. In C, sayde, angels, moether, harde, maester, master, father, &c. In D, faether, moether, mother, sayde, hearde, &c. In F on one side, faether, moether, broether, and on the other, angels, sayde, daye, brother, told, hearde, &c. In Y and z we have almost consistently faeyth, saeyde, hoepe, almoest, praeyer, &c. Yet again in b prayer, &c. In the headings of the Epistles we have saynct and saeynct. Some spellings certainly belong to a foreign compositor, thongs (tongues, 1 Cor. xiii.); thaugh (taught). Some I cannot explain, caled (called), holly (holy), which forms are consistently used. Of possible explanations none seems more likely than that the copy was read to a Flemish compositor (at Brussels? or Malines?) and that the vowels simply give the Flemish equivalents of the English vowel sounds.

The text is carefully revised, as will be shewn afterwards, and the chapter headings are simply transferred from the table of the Gospels and Acts in the Testament of 1534.

'pleased God,' as he wrote in his first Prologue, 'to 'put [the translation] in his mind,' and if we look at his life and his work, we cannot believe that he was left without the Spirit of God in the executionof it. His single honesty is beyond all suspicion. To the end he retained unchanged, or only deepened and chastened, his noble forgetfulness of self in the prospect of its accomplishment, with a jealous regard for the sincere rendering of the Scriptures. Before he published the revised edition of 1534 he had been sorely tried by the interference of Joye, which might, as he thought, bring discredit to the Gospel itself. The passage, with which he closes his disclaimer of Joye's edition reflects at once his vigour and his tenderness. There is in it something of the freedom and power of Luther, but it is charged with a simple humility which Luther rarely if ever shews....' My part,' Tyndale writes, 'be not in Christ if mine heart be 'not to follow and live according as I teach, and 'also if mine heart weep not night and day for 'mine own sin and other men's indifferently, be-'seeching God to convert us all and to take his-'wrath from us and to be merciful as well to all 'other men, as to mine own soul, caring for the 'wealth of the realm I was born in, for the king 'and all that are thereof, as a tender-hearted mo-'ther would do for her only son.

Tyndale's character is heroic. He could see clearly the work to which he was called and pursue it with a single unswerving faith in GOD and in the powers which GoD had given him. It was otherwise with Miles Coverdale, who was allowed to finish what Tyndale left incomplete. The differences of the men are written no less on their features than on their lives. But our admiration for the solitary massive strength of the one must not make us insensible to the patient labours and tender sympathy of the other¹. From the first Coverdale appears to have attached himself to the liberal members of the old party and to have looked to working out a reformation from within through them. As early as 1527 he was in intimate connexion with Crumwell and More'; and in all probability it was under their patronage that he was able to prepare for his translation of Holy Scripture. How long he thus laboured we cannot tell3. In 1529 he met

¹ The later Puritanism of Coverdale is consistent with this view of his character. He was a man born rather to receive than

Tyndale at Hamburgh¹, and must have continued CHAP. abroad for a considerable part of the following EXTERNAL years up to 1536. In the meantime a great change had passed over England since the 'Bill' of 1530'. At the close of 1534 a convocation under the presidency of Cranmer had agreed to petition the king that he would 'vouchsafe to decree that a transla-'tion of the Scriptures into English should be made 'by certain honest and learned men whom the king 'should nominate; and that the Scriptures so trans-'lated should be delivered to the people according 'to their learning'.' Crumwell, who must have been well aware of the turn which opinion had taken, seems now to have urged Coverdale to com-

'Nothing in the world I desire 'but books as concerning my 'learning: they once had, I do not doubt, but Almighty God 'shall perform that in me which 'he of his plentiful favour and 'grace hath begun.' Anderson fixes this in 1531. The letter however from style seems to be nearly contemporary with another addressed to Crumwell in I 527.

1 Foxe, Acts and Monuments, v. 120. I see nothing derogatory to Tyndale or improbable in Foxe's explicit statement that at this time Coverdale helped him intranslating the Pentateuch; though on such a point Foxe's unsupported statement is not sufficient evidence.

³ Strype, Cranmer, p. 34. It is uncertain whether it was after this resolution (as seems most likely), or not till after the corresponding resolutions of 1536, that Cranmer endeavoured to engage the bishops in a translation or revision of the English Bible [New Testament], of which attempt Strype has preserved an amusing anecdote: Cranmer, p. 48.

But up to the present time the place where it was printed is wholly undetermined, though most bibliographers agree that it was printed abroad. Various conjectures have been made, but when examined minutely they are found to be unsupported by any substantial evidence. The wood-cuts and type are certainly not those used by Egenolph of Frankfort, to which however they bear a very close resemblance2. On the other hand, no book printed by Froschover of Zurich has yet been found with more than the two larger kinds of type used in Three title- Coverdale's Bible 3: The question is further complicated by the fact that the title-page and preliminary matter were reprinted in a different (English) type4, and the five remaining title-pages re-

Two copies have a title-page correspond- EXTERNAL ing to the body of the book, dated 1555, and one of them preserves a single page of the original preliminary matter. Another copy has a title-page in English type, corresponding to the English preliminary matter, dated also 1535. The two other title-pages are printed in English type, but with the date 15361. Thus there can be no reason to doubt that the book was issued both with the foreign and English title-pages, &c.2, though it may still be doubted whether the English titlepage, &c. belongs to 1536 or to 15358.

See App. II.

² The fragment of the foreign printed Prologue offers only one important variation from the corresponding part of the English Prologue: Mr Fry, I.c. p. 18.

It is of course impossible to determine the cause of the suppression of the foreign title-page and Prologue. Coverdale may have explained too much in detail 'the Douche and Latin' sources from which he borrowed to suit the wishes of his patrons or publishers. The change in the title-page suggests the conjecture, which is however otherwise unsupported.

It is possible that the explanatory words taken in connexion with some further details in the original prologue may have been displeasing to the promoters of the edition, and that a new and less explicit title-page, &c. was substituted for the first, However this may have been, the statement itself, as will be seen afterwards, was literally true, and Coverdale describes clearly enough in the existing prologue the secondary character of his work1.

Coverdale's account of his work.

Coverdale indeed disclaims the originality which friends and detractors have alike assigned to him. And it is in this that the true beauty and truth of his nature are seen. He distinctly acknowledges that he could but occupy for a time the place of another; nay he even looks to this as the best fruit of his labours that he should call out a

The supposition that the publication of the work was delayed by the fall of Q. Anne Boleyn is quite baseless. The substitution of the name of Q. Jane without any other alteration in the edition of 1537 is like that of the name of Edward VI. for Henry VIII. in the edition of 1550. The appropriateness of epithets was not much considered by early editors. Mr Fry has shewn, I.c. pp. 10 ff. that all the dedications found in copies of the first edition with Q. Jane's name belong to the edition of 1537.

Coverdale was in Paris and disowned by him on the ground that 'as it was disagreeable to my 'former translation in English. 'so was not the true copy of the 'Latin text observed' (Remains, p. 33). Accordingly he revised it 'weeding out the faults that 'were in the Latin and English 'before' (id.), and printed a new edition in Paris in the same year which was published by Grafton and Whitchurch, and dedicated to Lord Crumwell. Nycolson however put forth another impression of his edition under the name of John Hollybushe (1538).

It is probable that Coverdale simply left instructions with the printer as to how the work should be done, not foreseeing the difficulties which would arise, and that the printer engaged Hollybushe to superintend the work which Coverdale when he saw it disayowed. Coverdale's own Testament is an adaptation of his version to the Latin. Hollybushe's is a new version from the Latin on the basis of Coverdale's. Specimens are given in App. VI.

The titles of the two principal editions are the following:

It is very difficult to ascertain the exact rela- Coverdale's tion in which the first edition of Coverdale's Bible distinctly sanctioned stood to the civil authority. There can be no by the King doubt that it was undertaken by the desire of in 1535. Crumwell, and its appearance may have been hastened by the change of feeling which found expression in the resolutions of Convocation in 1534, though it could not have owed its origin to them. But when it was finished in October 1535 Crumwell appears to have been unable to obtain a definite license from the king, or it may be that he thought it more prudent to await the publication of the book. So much is certain that the first edition went forth without any distinct royal sanction. The book was not suppressed, and this was all. But Convocation was not satisfied; CHAP. II. EXTERNAL and in 1536 they again petitioned that a new HISTORY. translation might be undertaken. Nothing however was done; but the relation in which the king stood to the Papal See had already given greater importance to the public recognition of the supremacy of Scripture.

A Council held by

So it happened that when a council was held in Crumwell. the next year under the presidency of Crumwell, as vicar general, to determine certain articles of faith, the varieties of opinion about Scripture found vigorous expression. Alexander Ales has left a vivid account of the meeting which has been transcribed by Foxe. 'At the king's pleasure all 'the learned men but especially the bishops assem-'bled, to whom this matter seemed to belong..... 'The bishops and prelates attending upon the 'coming of Crumwell, as he was come in, rose up 'and did obeisance unto him as to their vicar-'general, and he again saluted every one in their 'degree, and sat down in the highest place at the 'table, according to his degree and office.....' Thereupon Crumwell opened the discussion by the King to the Bishops to the Great Bible. See p. 97.

¹ On the whole it seems best to refer Coverdale's account of the reference of 'his Bible' by

sketching in a short speech the king's purpose and CHAP. commands. ['He will not] admit' he said 'any EXTERNAL 'articles or doctrine not contained in Scripture, but HISTORY. On this 'the bishops rose 'up altogether giving thanks unto the king's 'majesty.....for his most godly exhortation.....' There was less unanimity afterwards. The discussion turned upon the Sacraments. Cranmer wisely urged moderation and accuracy of definition. Ales, at the invitation of Crumwell, proceeded to investigate the meaning of the word. Stokesley, bishop of London, interrupted him as he was examining the opinions of the fathers, and was in turn checked by Fox of Hereford, who reminded both that 'they were commanded by 'the king that these controversies should be de-'termined only by the rule and judgment of the 'Scripture.' Then specially addressing the bishops

'Thus through the in-'dustry of Crumwell the colloquies were brought 'to this end, that albeit religion could not wholly 'be reformed, yet at that time there was some 'reformation had through England1'.

In the meantime the first edition of Coverdale's The second Bible was exhausted. The fall and death Oueen Anne, which had seemed likely to be fatal thorised to the cause of the reformers had not staved the desire for the vernacular Scriptures which sprang from popular and not from political impulses. The feeling of the clergy and the bishops was indeed divided on the question, but even among them the king could find sufficient support to justify a decided step in directly authorising the publication of the English Bible². The name of Queen Jane was substituted for that of Oueen Anne in the dedication without further change, and at length the English Bible was not only tacitly overlooked but distinctly allowed to circulate freely. Coverdale, through Crumwell's influence, had established a precedent, and successors were found at once to avail themselves of it.

Prayer before reading the Scriptures.

The revised edition of Coverdale differs slightly in text and arrangement from that of 1535. One significant addition is worthy of notice, 'A prayer 'to be used before reading the Bible: Because 'that when thou goest to study in Holy Scripture 'thou shouldest do it with reverence, therefore 'for thine instruction and loving admonition 'thereto, the reverend father in God Nicholas, 'Bishop of Salisbury, hath prescribed this prayer 'following, taken out of the same.

"Keep my steps within thy paths, lest my feet "turn into any contrary way."

§ 3. MATTHEW (ROGERS).

Coverdale, we have seen, looked earnestly for the displacing of his own work by another. His prayers and the prayers of his readers were answered sooner than he could have hoped. Tyndale, at the time of his martyrdom, had published of the Old Testament the Pentateuch and book of Jonah, with a few detached pieces, being 'Epistles 'from the Old Testament according to the use of 'Salisbury,' including Lessons from Ecclesiasticus and Wisdom¹. But he had left in manuscript,

> Thomas Matthew has been commonly assumed, on the authority of Foxe, to be simply a pseudonym for John Rogers. Nothing can be more unlikely. The name stands at full at the end of the dedication, and the initials J. 3 A copy of Tyndale's translation of Jonah was found in 1861 by Lord A. Hervey, bound up in a volume of tracts. It has been published with the Prologue and Coverdale's version by Mr Fry in fac simile (1863). As some writers still venture to say that Matthew gives Tyndale's and not Coverdale's version, it may be worth while to indicate the various readings of one chapter (chap. ii.).

Cranmer's joy at receiving it.

Whether Cranmer was privy to the preparation of this edition or not is uncertain, but it is evident that the authors of it had good reason to be assured that he would welcome its appearance. The first tidings of its arrival in England is contained in a letter which he addressed to Crumwell². 'My 'especial good lord...', he writes, 'these shall be to 'signify unto the same that you shall receive by 'the bringer thereof a bible in English, both of a 'new translation and of a new print, dedicated 'unto the king's majesty, as further appeareth by a 'pistle unto his grace in the beginning of the book; 'which in mine opinion is very well done, and 'therefore I pray your lordship to read the same.

Scheme for reprinting it.

Matthew's Bible must have been eagerly welcomed. In the same year in which it was imported a scheme was made for reprinting it in England in a smaller form by 'Douche men dwelling within 'this realm,' 'for covetousness'.' Grafton, who had ventured a large sum upon the original edition, which consisted of fifteen hundred copies, begged Crumwell for protection, and suggested that he might command in the king's name 'that every 'curate have one of them....yea and that every 'Abbey should have six....yea,' he adds, 'I would 'none other but they of the Papistical sort should 'be compelled to have them.' Grafton and Whitchurch were reimbursed for their expenditure; and in the next year they were ready to embark in a new enterprise, which was

§ 4. THE GREAT BIBLE (CRUMWELL, CRANMER, TUNSTALL AND HEATH).

It is indeed evident that Crumwell's zeal for Crumwell provides the circulation of the vernacular Scriptures could for the preparation of not be satisfied with the license which he had the Great obtained for the Bibles of Coverdale and Matthew.

The first was imperfect in its conception: the second was burdened with notes and additions which could not fail sooner or later to call out bitter antagonism. Under these circumstances he appears to have applied to Coverdale, who was in England in the early part of 1538, to undertake the charge of a new edition on the basis of Matthew's but with a more complete critical collation of the Hebrew and Latin texts than had been

that this 'smaller' edition was meant.

¹ Taverner's Bible does not answer fully to the description; otherwise it might be supposed hitherto attempted. Grafton and Whitchurch had CHAP. II. EXTERNAL earned by their former work the privilege of undertaking the conduct of this, but the resources of the English press were not adequate to carry it out as Crumwell wished. And so about Lent Coverdale proceeded with Grafton to Paris to superintend the printing there. A license was obtained from Francis for the execution of the work', which was commenced on a splendid scale by Regnault. Coverdale pressed forward the en-7une 23. terprise with all haste, for even from the first they Sept. 12. were 'daily threatened and looked ever to be 'spoken withal.' By September he could inform Crumwell that 'Your Lordships work of the Bible '...goeth well forward, and within four months 'will draw to an end by the grace of Almighty 'God.' Three months later when the text was as much of the Bible as was ready to Crumwell by Dec. 13. the help of Bishop Bonner, ambassador at Paris, that if 'the rest were confiscated yet this at least CHAP. 'might be safe.' In four days more the expected EXTERNAL inhibition came. An order from the inquisitorgeneral for France forbade the further progress of the work and the removal of the printed sheets. Coverdale and Grafton made their escape, but not long after returned to Paris and conveyed presses, types and workmen to London, and even rescued a large quantity of the condemned sheets—'four 'great-dry vats' full -which had been sold to a tradesmen as waste paper, instead of being burnt. Thus that which had seemed to be for the hindrance of Crumwell's design really forwarded it permanently in a wonderful manner by introducing into England the materials and men best suited to carry it out. The Bible, henceforth known as the Great Bible, was finished in April, but without the critical and explanatory commentary which Coverdale had designed1. While the revision was

A copy of this edition on vellum designed for Crumwell and described by Coverdale himself, is now in the Library of St John's College, Cambridge.

It is worthy of remark that this Bible has no dedication. And when it was drawing to a close, he writes regretfully: 'Pity it were that the dark places of the 'text, upon which I have always set a hand ('should so pass undeclared. As for any private 'opinion or contentious words, as I will utterly 'avoid all such, so will I offer the annotations first 'to my said Lord of Hereford [Bonner], to the in-'tent that he shall so examine the same, afore they 'be put in print, if it be your Lordship's good plea-'sure that I shall do so.' But Coverdale's regret

The reference of 'Coverdale's Bible' to the Bishops by the king, and their confession that there were no heresies to be maintained thereby, appears to refer to this edition (Fryth, p. 78). See p. 82.

In a preliminary explanation of signs some account is given of the delay in the publication of the notes: 'We have also (as ye 'may see) added many hands 'both in the margin of this vo'lume and also in the text, upon the which we purposed to have made in the end of the Bible (in a table by themselves) certain godly annotations: but forasmuch as yet there hath not been sufficient time ministered to the king's most hornourable Council for the oversight and correction of the said annotations, we will therefore omit them till their more convenient leisure, doing now no more but beseech thee, most gentle reader, that when thou was ineffectual. The various marks which he designed remained in the text of several editions of EXTERNAL the Great Bible, but nothing more than a general explanation of their import was ever given. The volume of 'annotations' was deferred till a more convenient occasion, which never came. But in the mean time a complete English text of the Scriptures was provided for public use, which by an injunction framed beforehand Crumwell, as Sept. 1538. the king's vice-gerent, required should be set up in some convenient place in every church throughout the kingdom before a specified day 1. 'A docomest at such a place where a 'hand doth stand...and thou canst not attain to the meaning and true knowledge of that sentence, then do not rashly presume to make any private interpretation thereof, but submit thyself to the judgment of those 'that are godly learned in Christ Jesus.'

¹ There cannot be the least doubt that the 'Bible of the 'largest volume in English' was the edition being prepared in Paris. No one who has seen Coverdale's, Matthew's and Crumwell's Bibles together would hesitate as to the application of the description: the Bible and the injunction corresponded and were both due to the same man.

I cannot agree with Mr Anderson in supposing Matthew's Bible to have been intended: II. 34, in spite of Strype, Cranmer, I. 117. The date by which the Bible was to be procured was left blank. At the time when the injunctions were drawn up. the interruption of the printing could not have been definitely foreseen. Similar proclamations were issued by the king in May 1540 immediately after the publication of the second (Cranmer's) Great Bible; and again in May 1541, after the publication of the third, which bore the names of Tunstall and Heath. These injunctions were probably issued after September, and the date fixed in 1539. Cranmer, Works, 11. p. 81.

Henry on the very day on which Cranmer wrote to him to make a final decision about the price, Nov. 14. &c., the absolute right of licensing the publication of Bibles in England for five years. Thus all difficulties were removed from the way, and the Bible with the Preface of the archbishop was finished in April 15401. These six editions all have Cranmer's prologue, but the third and fifth bear the names of Tunstall and Heath upon the title-page, who are said to have 'overseen and 'perused' the translation 'at the commandment of 'the King's Highness.' The cause of this nominal revision is obvious. Crumwell had been disgraced and executed in July. The work which he had July 28. taken so much to heart was naturally suspected: and thus the open sanction of two bishops, prominent among the party opposed to him, was required to confirm its credit. The proposed Notes given up.

The variations in the texts of these editions of the Great Bible will be considered afterwards. But one important change was made in the original design of the book which requires to be noticed now. Coverdale, as we have seen, looked upon the notes as an important part of the work, and the reference to them was retained through three editions². With the fall of Crumwell all hope of publishing a commentary disappeared, and the 'pointing hands' were removed. It is not difficult to understand the objections to Coverdale's design, and a narrative which Foxe has preserved will explain the influence which led to its suppression.

¹ The expense of these editions was defrayed, as seems certain, by 'Antony Marler a haberdasher' of London, who presented to Henry a magnificent copy on vellum, with an autograph inscription, which is preserved in the British Museum. Mr Anderson quotes a minute of the Privy Council bearing on his privileges with regard to the sale, dated April 1541 (II. p. 142), and a patent for printing the Bible alone for four years: March 1542 (II. p. 152).

² Of April 1539: April 1540: July 1540. After this the ——the reference to notes—was omitted.

For the relation between the texts of the several issues of the Great Bible see Chap. II. § 4. I cannot tell by what surprising oversight Mr Anderson describes Crumwell's Bible as being Matthew's text.

The popular zeal for reading the Scriptures rally read. was not always manifested thus inconsiderately. In a public document drawn up to justify the position of the English Church in 15392 great stress is laid upon the revolution in common habits which was thus effected. One narrative, which is derived from actual experience will illustrate the feelings of the time. It was taken by Strype from a manuscript of Foxe.

'It was wonderful to see with what joy this 'book of God was received not only among the 'learneder sort and those that were noted for lovers ' of the reformation, but generally all England over 'among all the vulgar and common people; and 'with what greediness God's word was read and what resort to places where the reading of it was. 'Every body that could bought the book or busily 'read it or got others to read it to them if they 'could not themselves, and divers more elderly 'people learned to read on purpose. And even 'little boys flocked among the rest to hear portions 'of the holy Scripture read. One William Maldon Maldon's 'happening in the company of John Foxe, in the 'beginning of the reign of Q. Elizabeth, and Foxe 'being very inquisitive after those that suffered for religion in the former reigns, asked him if he 'knew any that were persecuted for the Gospel of

And when Foxe was very inquisitive who 'he was and what was his name, he confessed it 'was himself; and upon his desire he wrote out 'all the circumstances. Namely that when the 'king had allowed the Bible to be set forth to be 'read in all Churches immediately several poor 'men in the town of Chelmsford in Essex, where 'his father lived and he was born, bought the New 'Testament and on Sundays sat reading of it in 'the lower end of the Church: many would flock 'about them to hear their reading; and he among 'the rest, being then but fifteen years old, came 'every Sunday to hear the glad and sweet tidings 'of the Gospel. But his father observing it once 'angrily fetched him away and would have him 'say the Latin Matins with him, which grieved him 'much. And as he returned at other times to hear 'the Scripture read, his father still would fetch him 'away. This put him upon the thoughts of learn-'ing to read English that so he might read the 'New Testament himself; which when he had by 'diligence effected he and his father's apprentice 'bought the New Testament, joining their stocks

'together, and to conceal it laid it under the bed- CHAP. 'straw and read it at convenient times. One night EXTERNAL 'his father being asleep he and his mother chanced _____ 'to discourse concerning the crucifix, and kneeling 'down to it and knocking on the breast then used, 'and holding up the hands to it when it came by 'on procession. This he told his mother was plain 'idolatry....His mother enraged at him for this 'said, "Wilt thou not worship the cross which was 'about thee when thou wert christened and must 'be laid on thee when thou art dead?" In this 'heat the mother and son departed and went to 'their beds. The sum of this evening's conference 'she presently repeats to her husband; which he 'impatient to hear and boiling in fury against his 'son for denying worship to be due to the cross, 'arose up forthwith and goes into his son's chamber 'and, like a mad zealot, taking him by the hair of 'his head with both his hands pulled him out of 'the bed and whipped him unmercifully. And when the young man bore this beating, as he 'related, with a kind of joy, considering it was for 'Christ's sake and shed not a tear, his father seeing 'that was more enraged, and ran down and fetched 'an halter and put it about his neck, saying he 'would hang him. While Crumwell was hurrying forward his Bible revision of in Paris, another edition was being printed in Lon-Matthew's. don. This also was based on Matthew, and seems to have been executed in considerable haste. The editor was a layman and a lawyer, R. Taverner, who had a great reputation as a Greek scholar. At an earlier time he was one of the students of

He was acquainted with Crumwell, and by his influence the king appointed him to be one of his clerks of the signet. In the reign of Edward VI. he had a special license to preach, and a quaint account has been preserved of the studiously unclerical habit-with a velvet bonnet and damask gown, and gold chain, and sword-in which he discharged the duty. It was his humour also, as we are told, 'to quote the law in Greek.' These little touches are important, for they throw no small light upon the spirit in which he accomplished his revision. In one respect he stands above his predecessors. His Dedication to Henry is couched in language full at once of respect and manliness. He gives the king due credit for what he had done and speaks with modesty of his own labours:...' Superseded by the Great Bible.

Taverner's Bible (like Crumwell's) was published in 1539, in two editions, folio and quarto. It is furnished with a marginal commentary based upon Matthew's, but shorter, and containing some original notes. In the same year in which his Bible was printed, Taverner likewise put forth two editions (quarto and octavo) of the New Testament through another publisher; but the appearance of the Great Bible must have checked the sale of his works. The Bible and the New Testament were CHAP. II. each reprinted once, and his Old Testament was EXTERNAL adopted in a Bible of 1551. With these exceptions his revision appears to have fallen at once into complete neglect.

§ 6. A TIME OF SUSPENSE.

After the publication of the Great Bible (1539 The revision of —1541) the history of the English Version remains the Bible stationary for a long time. Nothing was done to amend it and severe restrictions were imposed upon its use. In 1542 a proposition was made in Feb. 17. convocation in the king's name for a translation of the New Testament to be undertaken by the Bishops. The books were portioned out, but Gardiner brought the scheme to an end by pressing the retention of a large number of Latin terms which would practically have made a version such as the Rhemish one was afterwards. As this condition was obviously inadmissible, the king, by Cranmer's influence, resolved to refer the translation to the others which are practically proper names like Christus, zizania, didrachma, tetrarcha, and others again which have apparently no special force, as simplex, dignus, ejicere, oriens, tyrannus.

¹ The list of words is a very strange one. With words like ecclesia, pænitentia, pontifex, peccatum, hostia, pascha, impositio manuum, confessio, which have a dogmatic significance, are Restrictions on the use of the Bible.

In the next year Parliament proscribed all translations bearing the name of Tyndale, and required that the notes in all other copies should be removed or obliterated. At the same time it was enacted that no women (except noble or gentle women), no artificers, apprentices, journeymen, serving-men, husbandmen, or labourers, should read to themselves or to others, publicly or privately, any part of the Bible under pain of imprisonment. Three years later (1546) the king repeated the prohibition against Tyndale's books with many others and included Coverdale's New Testament in the same category. Thus the Great Bible alone remained unforbidden, and it was probably at this time that the great destruction of the earlier Bibles and Testaments took place. And even where the book has been preserved, the titlepage has been in many cases destroyed that the true character of the volume might escape the observation of a hasty inquisitor.

Bibles destroyed. For the proclamation was not allowed to remain idle. The party of the 'old learning' even outran the letter of the edict. This had enjoined

'the burning of certain translations of the New CHAP. 'Testament,' but, 'they were so bold as to burn EXTERNAL 'the whole Bible, because they were of those men's, 'Tyndale's or Coverdale's, translation; and not 'the New Testament only.' Nay more, they were anxious to escape from the responsibility which they had incurred by sanctioning the Great Bible. Tunstall and Heath, who had been 'appointed to 'overlook the translation' at the time of Crumwell's execution, and had 'set their names there-'unto,' 'when they saw the world somewhat like 'to wring on the other side denied it; and said

But in the midst of this reaction Henry died Reaction (Jan. 28, 1547). The accession of Edward restored cession of the reforming party to power, and the young king VI. himself is said to have shewn a singular devotion to the Bible. According to some the English Bible was first used at his coronation2. 'When three 'swords were brought,' so Strype writes3, 'signs of his being king of three kingdoms, he said, 'there was one yet wanting. And when the nobles

And when the pious young king had 'said this, and some other like words, he command-'ed the Bible with the greatest reverence to be 'brought and carried before him.' However this may have been, the work of printing the English Scriptures was carried on during his reign with great activity. Thirty-five Testaments and thirteen Bibles were published in England in the six years and a half for which he occupied the throne. The public use of them was made the subject of special admonition and inquiry. Among the injunctions issued by the king (1547) on his accession was one requiring that all beneficed persons 'shall provide within three months next after this 'visitation, one book of the whole Bible of the 'largest volume in English; and within one twelve 'months next after the said visitation, the Para-'phrasis of Erasmus also in English upon the Go-'spels, and the same set up in some convenient 'place within the ... Church ..., whereas their pa-'rishioners may most commodiously resort unto 'the same and read the same.' And again, 'that 'they shall discourage no man (authorized and

'licensed thereto) from the reading of any part of CHAP. 'the Bible, either in Latin or in English, but shall EXTERNAL 'rather conform and exhort every person to read -'the same, as the very lively word of God, and the 'special food of man's soul that all Christian per-'sons are bound to embrace, believe and follow, if 'they look to be saved'.' In the next year Cranmer instituted inquiries into the fulfilment of these injunctions in his articles for the visitation of the diocese of Canterbury², further asking 'whether... ' priests being under the degree of bachelor of divi-'nity have of their own the New Testament both 'in Latin and English and the Paraphrase of Eras-'mus upon the same.'

But beyond this nothing of moment was actually achieved with regard to the English Version of the Scriptures. At this crisis the constitution of the English Church, and the remoulding of the Service-books was of more urgent importance than the revision of the Bible; but Cranmer did not over- A revision look this work. As it had been a great 'while his pious and most earnest desire that the 'Holy Bible should come abroad in the greatest 'exactness and true agreement with the original 'text, so he laid this work upon these two learned 'men. First that they should give a clear plain and succinct interpretation of the Scripture accord-'ing to the propriety of the language; and secondly 'illustrate difficult and obscure places and recon-'cile those that seemed repugnant to one another. 'And it was his will and his advice that to this end 'and purpose their public readings should tend... 'Fagius, because his talent lay in the Hebrew 'learning, was to undertake the Old Testament; 'and Bucer the New...Fagius entered upon the 'Evangelical prophet Esaias and Bucer upon the 'gospel of the Evangelist John, and some chapters 'in each book were dispatched by them. But it 'was not long but both of them fell sick, which 'gave a very unhappy stop to their studies'.' Nothing indeed is here said of an immediate revision of the authorised Bible, but the instructions point to the direction in which the great archbishop's thoughts were turned.

He seems to have aimed at giving a thoroughly English render-Matthew. ing of the text, and in this endeavour he went to far greater lengths of quaintness than Taverner. Thus he coins new words to represent the old 'ecclesiastical' terms for which More and Gardiner contended most earnestly: frosent (apostle): bizvord (parable): gainbirth (regeneration): uprising or gainrising (resurrection): tablers (money-changers): tollers (publicans): freshmen (proselytes): and uses strange participial forms: gospeld (xi. 5): devild (viii. 28): moond (iv. 24); and even crossed for crucified. The fragment remained in manuscript till quite lately¹, and it is not certain that it was designed for publication. As it will not be necessary to revert to it again, a specimen may be given to shew its general style:

The English Bible in Mary's reign.

In the reign of Mary no English Bible was printed. Rogers and Cranmer were martyred: Coverdale with difficulty escaped to the Continent: the bones of Fagius and Bucer were burnt; but no special measures appear to have been taken for the destruction of the English Scriptures, or for the restriction of their private use. The public use of them in churches was necessarily forbidden. Proclamations against certain books and authors were issued, but no translations of the Old or New Testament were (as before) mentioned by name. Copies of the Bible which had been set up in churches were burnt; but they were not sought out or confiscated. Evidently a great change had come over the country since the time of Henry VIII. And in the mean time though the English press was CHAP. II. inactive the exiles abroad were busy, and at the EXTERNAL close of Mary's reign a New Testament was printed at Geneva, which was the first step towards a work destined to influence very powerfully our authorised Version. The origin of this must now be traced.

§ 7. THE GENEVAN BIBLE.

IT is unnecessary to dwell upon the disastrous The Genevan Testadiscussions at Frankfurt which divided the English ment of exiles of Mary's reign. The task of continuing the revision of the Bible fell naturally to the non-conforming party who retired to Geneva, the active centre of the labours of Calvin and Beza. Among them was W. Whittingham, who married Calvin's sister; and it is to him in all probability that we owe the Genevan Testament, which appeared in 1557 with an Introductory Epistle by Calvin.
The reviser's own address to the reader is anonymous, but it is definitely personal, and claims the work for a single man, and no one seems more likely than Whittingham to have undertaken it.

Furthermore that the 'reader might be by all means profited, I have 'divided the text into verses and sections' accord-'ing to the best editions in other languages....And 'because the Hebrew and Greek phrases, which 'are strange to render in other tongues and also 'short, should not be too hard, I have sometime 'interpreted them, without any whit diminishing 'the grace of the sense, as our language doth 'use them, and sometime have put to [added] that 'word which lacking made the sentence obscure, 'but have set it in such letters as may easily be 'discerned from the common text.'

> The attractiveness of the book was enhanced by a marginal commentary, in which the author boasts that 'to his knowledge he has omitted no-'thing unexpounded, whereby he that is anything 'exercised in the Scriptures of God might justly to have been borrowed by the reviser from Beza's Testament of 1556, which I have been unable to see. A different type was employed in the Great Bible to mark various readings.

So it was that the edition received a HISTORY. ready welcome and soon found its way to England. It was however only the beginning of a larger enterprise. Within a few months after it was The revifinished, a thorough revision of the whole Bible Bible unwas commenced, and was continued 'for the space 'of two years and more day and night.' The names of those who were engaged upon it are not given, but they were several and perhaps not the same during the whole time. The accession of Nov. 1558. Elizabeth broke up the society in part, but 'Whit-'tingham with one or two more did tarry at 'Geneva an year and a half after Q. A folio edition was April published by him in the next year, but this was printed at Geneva, and he does not appear to have availed himself afterwards of the privilege, though the patent may have helped the sale of the work.

The form in which the Bible was published Convenience of the marked its popular destination. Its size—a edition. moderate quarto—offers a marked contrast to the ponderous folios of Coverdale, Matthew and the Great Bible. With the same view the text was printed for the first time in Roman letter; and the division of the chapters into verses was introduced. A marginal commentary also was added, pure and vigorous in style, and, if slightly tinged with Calvinistic doctrine, yet on the whole neither unjust nor illiberal.

It was not therefore surprising that from the The poputime of its first appearance the Genevan Bible lar Bible. became the household Bible of the English-speaking nations; and it continued to be so for EXTERNAL about three quarters of a century. It was never sanctioned for public use in Churches; but the convenience of its form and the simple clearness of its notes gained it a wide popularity with the mass of the people.

> And the intrinsic merits of the book justified its popularity; for it was not without cause that the revisers say when reviewing their work: 'we may 'with good conscience protest that we have in 'every point and word, according to the measure 'of that knowledge which it pleased Almighty God 'to give us faithfully rendered the text, and in all 'hard places most sincerely expounded the same. 'For God is our witness that we have by all means 'endeavoured to set forth the purity of the word 'and right sense of the Holy Ghost for the edify-'ing of the brethren in faith and charity.'

> Thus it came to pass that the revision found a ready welcome even from those who were not predisposed in its favour. Some time after the 'Bishops' Bible' was undertaken, Bodley applied to Cecil for an extension of his patent. The Secretary consulted Parker before replying to the request. Parker's answer is conceived in a generous spirit. 'He and the bishop of London [Grindal] thought

§ 8. The Bishops' Bible.

The Genevan revision was, as has been seen,

¹ Strype's Parker, I. 412. One other revision of the New Testament must be classed with the Genevan versions, that by Lawrence Tomson, which was professedly based on Beza, and contained a new Commentary, translated in the main from his. This was published in 1576, and dedicated to F. Walsingham and F. Hastings; and became so popular that it was frequently substituted for the Genevan revision in the editions of the Genevan Bible.

Tomson repeats the promise of the Genevan editor with regard to the Commentary with even greater emphasis: 'I dare 'avouch it, and whoso readeth it 'shall so find it, that there is 'not one hard sentence nor dark 'speech nor doubtful word, but 'is so opened and hath such 'light given it, that children may 'go through with it, and the 'simplest that are may walk 'without any guide, without 'wandering and going astray.'

in the English Church. The commencement of Queen Elizabeth's reign was beset by many of the same difficulties which had occupied the great reformers on the accession of Edward VI. In the face of these it was not likely that measures would be taken for the revision of the English Bible. It was enough at first to restore what had been already once established. The injunctions which were issued by the Queen (1559) were closely moulded on those which had been put forth by Edward VI., and contained the same charge for the provision of a copy of the whole Bible of the 'largest volume' to be set up in some convenient place in each Church. No limitation however was now added to the general encouragement to read the Scriptures; but it was said significantly that all should 'read the same with great humility and 'reverence, as the very lively word of God1'.

Q. Elizabeth's Injunctions.

I Cardwell, Doc. Ann. I. 214. In the Injunctions of 1547 it is said, 'They [the parsons, vicars '&c.] shall discourage no man, 'authorized and licensed thereto, 'from the reading of any part of 'the Bible either in Latin or in 'English...' In the Injunctions of 1559 the words in italics are omitted. Cardwell, *Doc. Ann.*I. pp. 9, 214. On the other hand, the words in italics in the text are not contained in the Injunctions of 1547.

The concessions thus made fell in with the CHAP. general desire of the people. This was shewn in EXTERNAL a characteristic manner during the progress of the HISTORY. Bp. Guest.

Other fragments of correspondence shew some of the difficulties with which Parker had to contend. Guest, bishop of Rochester, in returning the book of Psalms which had been sent to him for correction, gives a singular view of the duties of a translator. 'I have not,' he says, 'altered the translation 'but where it gave occasion of an error. As at 'the first Psalm at the beginning I turn the præter-'perfect tense into the present tense, because the 'sense is too harsh in the præterperfect tense. 'Where in the New Testament one piece of a Psalm 'is reported I translate it in the Psalms according 'to the translation thereof in the New Testament, 'for the avoiding of the offence that may rise to 'the people upon divers translations.....'².

Bp. Cox.

Again, Cox, bishop of Ely, writing in May, 1566, says, 'I trust your Grace is well forward with the 'Bible by this time. I perceive the greatest burden

Jugge 'cum privilegio regiæ majestatis.' No word of flattery disfigures the book. It is even without a dedication. But a portrait of the Queen occupies the centre of the engraved title-page, and others of Leicester and Burleigh occur before the book of Joshua and the Psalms. At the end is an elegant couplet on the device of the pelican feeding her young:

Matris ut hæc proprio stirps est satiata cruore, Pascis item proprio, Christe, cruore tuos.

It was not by these signs only that Parker The spirit shewed his true sense of the character of the task which he had undertaken. The revisers, speaking through him in the Preface, express a noble consciousness of the immensity of their labour.

'There be yet,' they say, quoting the words of EXTERNAL John [Fisher] once Bishop of Rochester, 'in the Gospels very many dark places which without all 'doubt to posterity shall be made much more open. 'For why should we despair herein, seeing the 'Gospel was delivered to this intent that it might 'be utterly understanded of us, yea to the very 'inch. Wherefore forasmuch as Christ sheweth 'no less love to his Church now than hitherto he 'hath done, the authority whereof is as yet no 'whit diminished, and forasmuch as that Holy 'Spirit [is] the perpetual Keeper and Guardian 'of the same Church, whose gifts and graces do 'flow as continually and abundantly as from the 'beginning: who can doubt but that such things 'as remain yet unknown in the Gospel shall be 'hereafter made open to the later wits of our 'posterity, to their clear understanding?' They felt then that their labour was provisional, and that the Spirit had yet further lessons in His Word to teach to later ages.

The revisers not certainly known.

It is not certainly known by whom the whole revision was actually made. Initials are placed at the end of some of the books, and this Parker says was done by his own wish that the several scholars might be 'more diligent, as answerable for their

They do not stand at the end of groups of books which might naturally be supposed to have been given to one reviser. Once the same initials are repeated in consecutive books. Some names too are certainly passed over. Lawrence, for example², had a considerable part in the revision of the New Testament, and his initials nowhere occur. Of the revisers who can be probably identified eight were bishops, and from them the revision derived its popular title3.

The Bishops' Bible sanctioned by Convocation for public use,

When the edition was ready for publication Parker endeavoured to obtain through Cecil a recognition of it by the Queen. The revision did not, he pleaded, 'vary much from that translation which 'was commonly used by public order, except 'when the verity of the Hebrew and Greek moved 'alteration, or when the text was by some negligence mutilated from the original.' His design was to secure a uniform text for public use, and in some places the Genevan revision was now publicly read, which seemed to be an infringement of ecclesiastical discipline, and yet the Great Bible could not be honestly maintained. There is no

In the copy of the edition of 1568 which I have used the letters A. P. C. do not occur after Proverbs.

To the other books no initials are appended.

1 Parker's words are important as describing the care which was spent upon the edition, and the objects for which it was designed: 'Because I would you knew all,' he writes to Cecil, 'I 'send you a note to signify who 'first travailed in the divers 'Books; though after them 'some other perusing was had;

the letters of their names be 'partly affixed in the end of 'their Books; which I thought 'a policy to shew them, to make them more diligent, as answer-'able for their doings.... The Printer hath honestly done his 'diligence; if your honour would · obtain of the Queen's High-'ness that this edition might be 'licensed, and only commended 'in public reading in Churches, 'to draw to one uniformity, it were no great cost to the most 'parishes, and a relief to him for his great charges sustained.' (Biblioth. Sussex. I. pp. 311 f.). He presses for the grant of the Oueen's licence 'as well for

It was ordered in the 'Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical' of I571 that 'every archbishop and bishop should 'have at his house a copy of the holy Bible of the 'largest volume as lately printed at London...... 'and that it should be placed in the hall or the 'large dining room, that it might be useful to their 'servants or to strangers'.' It was also enjoined that each Cathedral should have a copy'; and the same provision was extended 'as far as it could be 'conveniently done' to all churches'.

These injunctions however do not seem to have been rigorously carried out; and sixteen years

'that in many churches they want their books, and have long time looked for this; as for that in certain places, be publicly used some translations which have not been laboured in your realm, baving inspersed divers prejudicial notes which might have been also well spared.' (Id. I. p. 313).

The Great Bible displaced by the Bishops'.

There is no evidence to shew how far this new effort was successful in securing exclusively for the Bishops' Bible public use in churches. The revision did not at least gain any such hold upon the clergy as to lead even them to adopt it alone privately; and when Martin assailed the English versions (1582) he takes the Great Bible, or the Bishops' or the Genevan indifferently; and Fulke

This version was made in all probability under the influence of [Cardinal] Allen, and Gregory Martin, Fulke's adversary, seems to have had the chief share in its execution. It was made from the Latin Vulgate and not from the original texts, and in the Preface to the New Testament the translators give at length the reasons which led them to take this course. The New Testament was published at Rheims in 1582 with copious controversial notes. The Old Testament was not published till 1609-10, at Donai, though it had been finished many years before. Martin indeed died in 1582, the year when the New Testament was published.

If we may judge from the editions published the circulation of the latter was more than quadruple that of the former, and the convenient forms in which it appeared marked its popular destination. There are only six editions of the Bishops' Bible in quarto and one in octavo; all the others (thirteen) are in folio; and no small edition was printed after that prepared by authority in 1584. Of the Genevan Bible, on the other hand, there are between 1568 and 1611 sixteen editions in octavo, fifty-two in quarto, and eighteen in folio.

Proposals for a revision of the Rible.

This rivalry was in every way undesirable; and in the conference on ecclesiastical matters which was held at Hampton Court shortly after the accession of James I, the authorised version of the Bible was brought forward as one of the things 'amiss in the Church.' The conference had no official or constitutional character, and was summoned by the king's proclamation, who had not yet himself been recognized as king by Parliament. But though it proved ineffectual in all other points, we owe to it our present Bible. The question was brought forward by Dr Reynolds, President of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, who quoted

Mr Anderson claims for Dr Reynolds the honour of having proposed originally that the translation should be 'without any 'marginal notes' (II. 371). But the passage of Galloway which he quotes, so far from professing to give Reynolds' own scheme, gives 'the heads which his Maiesty would have reformed at 'this time.' It is worthy of notice that in Archbp. Bancroft's visitation articles of 1605 the 'Bible of the 'greatest volume' is not mentioned as in the corresponding articles of Cranmer and Whitgift (§ 48. Cardwell's Doc. Ann. 11. 110).

The revisers chosen.

It does not appear in what way the actual selection of the revisers was made, but it is most likely that names were suggested by the universities and approved by the king. There is also some discrepancy as to the number engaged upon the work. The king speaks of fifty-four, and only forty-seven names appear upon the list. possible that some were originally appointed who did not in the end take any part in the revision, or that a committee of bishops was chosen as an independent group of revisers; but no satisfactory solution of the difficulty has yet been proposed". The delay, however, which took place in the commencement of the revision is sufficient to account for its existence; for though the preliminaries were settled before the end of 1604, the revision does not appear to have been seriously undertaken till 16073. The death of Mr Lively in 1605 was

The instructions given for the revision.

No doubt can be entertained as to the ability and acquirements of the revisers. At the same time care was taken to check individual fancies. Their duty was accurately defined in a series of rules which were drawn up probably under the direction of Bancroft. These provide for an elaborate scheme of revision as well as furnish general directions for the execution of the work¹.

It is impossible to tell how far all these provisers' acsions were adhered to. Almost all'that is certainly count of known of the proceedings of the revisers is contained in the noble preface which the printers have removed from modern editions of the Bible. In this Dr Miles Smith, afterwards Bishop of Gloucester, writing in the name of his fellow-labourers, gives some account of the time which was spent upon the revision, and of the manner and spirit in which it was executed. 'We did not,' he says, 'run over the work with that posting haste that the

The history of the book is unknown; but the occurrence of the reference-letters is at least a certain proof that it was not designed for the press. In all probability it contains simply a scholar's collation of the Royal and Bishops' texts, with an attempt to trace the origin of the corrections.

The corrections throughout the O. T. are apparently in the same hand: those in the N. T. are in a different hand and 'considerably more modern.

The text is corrected throughout some books to the Royal Version; and in some cases letters are attached (g, j, t) which appear to indicate the sources from which the corrections were derived. Mr J. Slow progress of the wards universal acceptance.

The printing of the Bishops' Bible was at once Version to- stayed when the new version was definitely undertaken. No edition is given in the lists later than 1606, though the New Testament from it was reprinted as late as 1618 (or 1619). So far ecclesiastical influence naturally reached. But it was otherwise with the Genevan Version which was chiefly confined to private use. This competed with the King's Bible for many years, and it was not till about the middle of the century that it was finally displaced. And thus, at the very time when the monarchy and the Church were, as it seemed, finally overthrown, the English people by their silent and unanimous acceptance of the new Bible gave a spontaneous testimony to the principles of order and catholicity of which both A new re- were an embodiment.

The Royal Bible unanimously received from the middle of the xvii th century.

With this notice the external history of the English Version appropriately ends. From the middle of the seventeenth century, the King's Bible has been the acknowledged Bible of the English-speaking nations throughout the world simply because it is the best. A revision which embodied the ripe fruits of nearly a century of labour, and appealed to the religious instinct of a great Christian people, gained by its own internal character a vital authority which could never have been secured by any edict of sovereign rulers².

To some of these questions only tentative or imperfect answers can be rendered at present; yet it is something to clear the way to a fuller investigation; and when once the novelty and complication of the problems become evident, it cannot fail but that a combination of labour will achieve their complete solution. Hitherto nothing has been done systematically towards the work. A few vague surmises and hasty generalizations have gained unchallenged currency and stopped thorough search; yet when viewed

Each revision stands in a definite relation to a particular position of the English Church. and may be expected to reflect its image in some degree. Moreover we possess the work at each stage of its structure and not only in its final completeness. Each part can be examined as it was first planned and executed, and not only as it was finally incorporated into a more complex whole. We can even determine the materials out of which it was raised, and the various resources of which its authors could avail themselves at each point of their task. For us the result stands now amidst the accumulated treasures of later researches. But if we would appreciate it rightly in itself we must once again surround it by the conditions under which it was obtained.

Problems involved in the internal history of the English Bible.

The close of the 15th century sealed a revolution in Europe. The ecclesiastical language of the West had given place to or at least admitted into fellowship the sacred languages of the East.
It was in vain that the more ignorant of the clergy

At Louvain a Louvain. foundation for the like purpose was added to the University about 1516 by Busleiden. Wolsey appears to have contemplated a similar course in his College at Oxford, where he founded in 1519 Oxford. a chair of Greek1. When complaints were made, Henry, acting no doubt under his inspiration, enjoined that 'the study of the Scriptures in their 'original languages should not only be permitted 'for the future, but received as a branch of the 'academical institution 2.' The work of Wolsey was left unfinished, but it is not without interest to find among his canons two, John Fryth and Richard Taverner, who became afterwards distin-

Thus everywhere men were being disciplined for the rendering the original text of the Bible into the living languages of Europe, and at the end of the first quarter of the 16th century sufficient materials were gathered for the accomplishment of their office.

Helps to the studv of Greek.

The appliances for the independent study of the Greek of the New Testament and the Septuagint Version of the Old were fairly adequate. Grammars were in wide circulation, of which the earliest was that of Lascaris (Milan, 1476) and the most enduring that of Clenardus (Louvain, 1530). In the interval between the appearance of these, numerous others were published in Italy, France, and Germany². The first lexicon of Craston (1480) was republished in a more convenient form by Aldus (1497) and supplemented by the important collections of Guarino (Phavorinus) in his Etymologicum Magnum. But these and all other earlier lexicons were eclipsed by the so-called Commentaries of Budæus (Paris 1529), a true Thesaurus CHAP. of Greek, which still remains a vast monument and INTERNAL storehouse of learning. The very names of many of the great German scholars shew the passion with which the study was pursued. Melanchthon (Schwarzerd), Œcolampadius (Hausschein), Capnio (Reuchlin), Erasmus (Gerhard), Ceratinus (Horn), are memorable instances to prove the power of Greek to furnish home names to the Teutonic nations. And though England can boast of no original Greek works till a later time, yet Croke, a scholar of Grocyn, first introduced a thorough knowledge of the language into northern Germany, where, it is said, he was received 'like a heavenly messenger1'.

The pursuit of Hebrew was not less flourishing Helps to the in the North. In Italy Greek had been welcomed Hebrew. at first as a new spring of culture. Beyond the Alps Greek and Hebrew were looked upon as the keys to Divine Truth. So it was that while Greek languished in Italy and Hebrew scarcely gained a firm footing among the mass of students; in Germany both were followed up with an ardent zeal which for good alike and for evil is yet fruitful in great issues. An Italian of the early part of the 16th century instinctively marked the spiritual INTERNAL difference of the North and South when he observed that in Germany Hebrew was prized in the same manner as Latin in Italy. Thus the early translators of the Old Testament found materials already fitted for their use. The first Hebrew Grammar was composed by Pellican (1503). This was followed by that of Reuchlin, with a dictionary, in 1506. Another by S. Münster appeared in 1525, who published also a Chaldee grammar in 1527. Pagninus, the translator of the Bible, added a new dictionary in 1529. The great Complutensian Polyglott (published 1520, finished 1517) contained a Latin translation of the Targum of Onkelos and a complete Lexicon to the Hebrew and Chaldee texts, with a Hebrew grammar.

Publications of the Latin, Hebrew. and Greek texts of the Scriptures.

In the meantime, while all the chief classical authors had been published, the original texts and some of the ancient versions of Holy Scripture had also become accessible. The Latin Vulgate is supposed to have been the first book printed (c. 1455), and this first edition was followed by a multitude of others, in some of which, and notably in the Latin text of the Complutensian Polyglott. old manuscripts were used.

Complete Latin translations from the Hebrew were made by Sanctes Pagninus (1527), and by Sebast. Münster (1534-5). Considerable portions were rendered afresh in Latin by Zwingli and Œcolampadius; and single books by many writers before 1535. The Septuagint was contained in the Complutensian Polyglott, and in a distinct text in the edition of Aldus 1518. The Greek Testament appeared for the first time many years after the Latin and Hebrew texts edited by Erasmus with a new Latin Translation in 15161. A second edition followed in 1519: a third, which may be considered his standard edition, in 1522; and others in 1527, and 1535. An edition from the press of Aldus with some variations appeared together with the Septuagint in 1518. The Complutensian Polyglott printed in 1514, in which there is an independent text of the New Testament, was not published till 1520. Other editions followed

HISTORY.

It remains only to characterize generally the critical value of these editions. The Hebrew text of the Old Testament edited by Ben Chayim (1525) is substantially good. Indeed as Hebrew Manuscripts all belong to a comparatively late recension the extent of real variation between them is limited. The Latin texts accessible in the first half of the 16th century were indifferent. The Greek texts of the New Testament, and this is most important, were without exception based on scanty and late manuscripts, without the help of the oriental versions and the precious relics of the Old Latin. As a necessary consequence they are far from correct, and if the variations are essentially unimportant as a whole, yet the errors in the text of our English Testament inherited from them are considerably more important than the existing errors of translation.

The first independent German Versions. Such were the materials which the first great Reformers found to help them in their work of rendering the original Scriptures into their own languages. Before the English labourers entered the field it was already occupied. Numerous students in Germany had translated separate books

The Prophets at various intervals (Jonah in 1526) afterwards; and the whole work in 1534. The second revised edition did not appear till 1541. But in the meanwhile a band of scholars at Zurich, including Zwingli, Pellican and Leo Juda, Zurich had taken Luther's work as the basis of a new translation up to the end of the Hagiographa, and completed it by an original translation of the Prophets and the Apocrypha. This was published in fragments from 1524-1529, and first completely in two forms in the latter year. It was republished in 1530, and with a new translation of the Hagiographa in 1531, and often afterwards1. Another Worms German Bible with an original translation of the Prophets appeared at Worms in 15292. The French French translation of Lefèvre (Faber Stapulensis) was made tions.

is said to have been based in the Old Testament

The works of the first German translators, or at least of Luther, must then be added to those previously enumerated as possibly accessible to Tyndale² during the execution of his version of the New Testament. Luther's name was indeed at the time identified with the idea of vernacular versions of Scripture, and it is not surprising that More affirmed that Tyndale's work was a translation of Luther's, an assertion in which he has been followed by writers who have less excuse³. What

- ¹ I have not examined Lesevre's translation; and am ignorant also of the real character of Bruccioli's Italian version (1530—1532), which is said to have heen made from the original.
- ² The Wycliffite Versions do not seem to have exercised any influence on the later English Versions, unless an exception be made in the case of the Latin-English Testament of Coverdale mentioned above. The coincidences of rendering between this and Purvey are frequently remarkable, but as both literally reproduce the Vulgate I have been unable to find (so far as I have examined them) any certain proof of the dependence of one on the other.

As far as Tyndale is concerned—and his work was the undoubted basis of the later revisions—his own words are sufficient: 'I had,' he says in the New Testament, 'no man to 'counterfeit [imitate], neither was helped with English of any 'that had interpreted the same 'or such like thing in the Scrip-'ture beforetime.' (Epistle to the Reader, I. p. 390.)

Hallam's account is so amazing from the complication of blunders which it involves that Tyndale's version really was we have now to CHAP-III.

Testament before he could have heard of Luther's', and in the year in which that appeared (1522) went up to London with a translation from Isocrates as a proof of his knowledge of Greek. His knowledge of Hebrew and Greek is also incidentally attested by the evidence of Spalatinus', of his opponent Joye', and yet more clearly by the steady confidence with which he deals with points of Hebrew and Greek philology when they casually arise. Thus after defending his renderings of presbyteros (elder), charis (favour), agape (love), &c.

it deserves to be quoted as a curiosity. 'From this translation '[Luther's], and from the Latin 'Vulgate, the English one of Tyndale and Coverdale, published in 1535 or 1536, is avowedly 'taken...That of 1537, commonity called Matthew's Bible, from the name of the printer, though in substance the same as Tyndale.

against Sir T. More he says (1530): 'These things' to be even so Mr More knoweth well enough: for 'he understandeth the Greek, and he knew them 'long ere I'.' Again in an earlier work he writes (1528): 'The Greek tongue agreeth more with the 'English than the Latin. And the properties of 'the Hebrew tongue agree a thousand times more 'with the English than the Latin'.' On the other hand there is nothing to shew that he was thoroughly acquainted with German up to the time when his New Testament was finished, and the testimony of Spalatinus tacitly proves that he was not.'

Tyndale's Version compared with Vulgate and Luther,

But the translation of the New Testament itself is the complete proof of its own independence. It is impossible to read through a single chapter without gaining the assurance that Tyndale rendered the Greek text directly while still he consulted the Vulgate, the Latin translation of Erasmus, and the German of Luther. Thus taking a chapter at random we find in Eph. iv. the following certain traces of the peculiarities of the Greek

And so again Tyndale's rendering of vv. 5, 12, 14, 22 might come from the Greek but hardly from the Latin. On the other hand it is evident that he had the Vulgate before him, and that he owed to it the rendering 'blindness of their hearts' (cæcitatem), which has wrongly retained its place in the authorised version.

There is, however, one other authority who had The relagreater influence upon Tyndale than the Vulgate Tyndale to or Luther. The Greek text of the New Testament published by Erasmus, which Tyndale necessarily used, was accompanied by an original Latin version in which Erasmus faithfully rendered the text he had printed. This translation is very frequently followed by Tyndale. Thus in the phrases already quoted from Eph. iv.1 three at least seem to be due to Erasmus. 27 backbiter, calumniatori, (Erasm.); 29 filthy communication, sermo spurcus (Erasm.); id. where need is, quoties opus est (Erasm.). But on the other hand, any chapter will shew important differences between Erasmus and Tyndale, not always indeed in Tyndale's favour, but sufficient at least to prove that he exercised a free judgment both in the general character and in the details of his version. A collation of Col. ii offers the following considerable variations:

1 This last verse offers one of the most remarkable coincidences between Luther and Tyndale which I have noted. Luther's version is: durch selbsterwählte Geistlichkeit und Demuth und dadurch dass sie des Leibes nicht verschonen und dem Fleisch nicht seine Ehre thun zu seiner Nothdurft. The version in the Wittenberg Latin Bible is quite different. In a number of passages taken almost at random where Tyndale differs considerably from Luther I have noted that he agrees with Erasmus in Lu. xi. 36, 40; xix. 43. John ii. 9; x. 12. Acts iii. 16. 2 Cor. xi. 8. Gal. v. 18. Eph. v. 16; and differs from Erasmus in Lu. xix. 42. John xi. 2. Acts iii. 20. Rom. ix. 11, 28. Gal. v. 5. Col. iii. 9. Other differences exist between the texts of 1525, 1534 in vv. 10, 13, 14, 16, 18, 20. In five places the latter CHAP. It does not seem necessary to bring forward III.

text approaches Luther more nearly than the earlier: in one the converse holds.

¹ It is greatly to be regretted that Mr Fry did not add to his facsimile of the small Testament of 1525 a collation of the Grenville quarto fragment. The conclusion which Mr Anderson draws from the spelling as to the priority of the quarto (I. 70) is hasty and unsatisfactory. The spelling in both editions is very inaccurate. In the Sermon on the Mount I have noted among other variations the following which are more or less characteristic. The differences in text are very slight, and in no one case (except in the misprint vi. 24) does the quarto edition give a reading which has been preserved in the edition of r534. So far therefore the quarto text seems to have been cursorily revised before it was reprinted at Worms. But a complete collation of the text is desirable.

Comparison of the 1525, 1534.

A comparison of the texts of the first and editions of second editions fully bears out the description which Tyndale here gives of his work. To take one example only: of the thirty-one changes which I have noticed in the later version of I John, INTERNAL about a third are closer approximations to the Greek: rather more are variations in connecting particles or the like designed to bring out the argument of the original more clearly; three new readings are adopted; and in one passage it appears that Luther's rendering has been substituted for an awkward paraphrase. Yet it must be remarked that even in this revision the changes arc far more frequently at variance with Luther's renderings than in accordance with them1.

The importance of the New Testament of 1534, The Glosses which is altogether Tyndale's noblest monument, tion of gives a peculiar interest to the short glosses with which it is furnished. Though these do not throw much light upon the translation itself, yet they give such a lively image of the character of Tyndale that a few specimens of them cannot be out of place even in a history of the text2. Generally they are pregnant and pithy comments on the passage with which they deal, designed to guide the reader to its spirit, and Bengel himself is not

The edition of 1535 again revised from the Greek.

In his Preface to the edition of 1534, Tyndale had expressed his readiness to revise his work and adopt any changes in it which might be shewn to be improvements. The edition of 1535, however enigmatic it may be in other respects, is a proof of his sincerity. The text of this exhibits a true revision and differs from that of 1534, though considerably less than the text of 1534 from that of 1525¹. Sometimes the changes are made to secure a closer accordance with the Greek²: sometimes to gain a more vigorous or a more idiomatic

¹ In z John I have noted sixteen variations from the text of 1534 as against thirty-two in that of 1534 from the original text. From the great inaccuracy of the edition of 1535 it is often difficult to decide what are printers' errors and what intentional changes. The changes in the Gospels and Acts are (if I may trust a very limited collation) fewer than those in the Epistles. The variations in I John are given at length in App. III.

In the different Epistles the number of variations is considerable. In the Epistle to the Ephesians, neglecting undoubted misprints, I have noted only the following: i. I Jesu (Jesus); 20 the dead (death). ii. I you hath he quickened (hath qu. you); iii. II purposed to (p. in); iv. II and some teachers (om.); iv. I6 of himselt (itself); vi. 20 messenger (a m.). singular testimony to the diligence with which Tyndale still laboured at his appointed work.

Nothing seemed trifling to him, we may believe,

if only he could better seize or convey to others

the meaning of one fragment of Scripture.

Tyndale's first Testament was without notes: This edition again so too was his last. The short Prologues to the without four Evangelists are printed separately before each Gospel. The contents of the tables for the Gospels and the Acts are prefixed in detail before each chapter. The marginal references of the edition of 1534 are generally preserved. But with these exceptions the simple text of the New Testament is given without any addition except the list of books on the reverse of the title-page, and the Epistles from the Old Testament at the end³.

HISTORY.

CHAP. Thus Tyndale ended as he had begun. His last INTERNAL Testament was a final appeal to the King and to the English people. If the text could gain currency it was enough, as he had repeatedly declared1.

The influence of Luther on Tyndale's own writings.

Tyndale, as we have seen, both in his first translation and in his two subsequent revisions of the New Testament, dealt directly and principally with the Greek text. If he used the Vulgate or Erasmus or Luther it was with the judgment of a scholar. His complete independence in this respect is the more remarkable from the profound influence which Luther exerted upon his writings generally. The extent to which Tyndale silently incorporated free or even verbal translations of passages from Luther's works in his own has escaped the notice of his editors. To define it accurately would be a work of very great labour, but the result, as exhibiting the points of contact and divergence in the opinions of the two great reformers, would be originally intended to form part of the same book. They are severally contained in separate sheets with distinct signatures. The watermarks of the paper, as far as I can make out, are distinct, and the type in which the Prologue is printed does not appear to me to range with that used in the body of the book, though extremely like it. Moreover, and this is most worthy of notice, the orthography of the two preliminary pieces presents none of the marked peculiarities by which the translation itself is generally characterized. 'called' and 'Holy' are spelt according to common usage.

a most instructive passage in the doctrinal history CHAP. of the time. Tyndale's 'Prologue' to his quarto INTERNAL Testament, his first known writing, almost at the beginning introduces a large fragment from Luther's Preface to the New Testament. There is indeed a ring in the opening words which might have led any one familiar with Luther's style to suspect their real source. 'Evangelion (that we 'Gospel) is a Greek word; and signifieth good, Testament. 'merry, glad and joyful tidings, that maketh a 'man's heart glad and maketh him sing, dance 'and leap for joy: as when David had killed 'Goliah the giant, came glad tidings to the Jews 'that their fearful and cruel enemy was slain and 'they delivered out of all danger; for gladness 'whereof they sung, danced and were joyful'.'

Like the Preface to the New Testament this writing of Luther's also had been translated into Latin (1523), and Tyndale's version seems at one time to follow the German and at another time the Latin text. Some phrases, as 'every Christian man must exercise him'self therein [the Epistle to the Romans] as with 'the daily bread of the soul',' and 'God judgeth after the ground of the heart..... therefore his law requireth the ground of the heart and love from the 'bottom thereof, and is not content with the outward work only, but rebuketh those works most of all which spring not of love from the ground and low bottom of the heart...' Exposition of the Sermon on the Mount.

The coincidences between Tyndale's Exposition of the Sermon on the Mount and that of Luther, though fewer, are even more worthy of notice. Luther's Expository Sermons were delivered in 1530, and printed in 1532, but they were not translated into Latin till 1533. On the other hand Tyndale's Exposition was printed in 1532. He must then have used the German edition of Luther, or perhaps even notes taken by some friend or by himself. The coincidences which are comparatively rare are still verbal and at the same time tacit. Two examples will be sufficient to indicate their character.

Tyndale on the other hand has no Preface to the Acts or to the Apocalypse; while Luther has to both. With these exceptions all Tyndale's Prologues correspond generally in character and form with Luther's, and every one besides that to I Corinthians is framed out of or with reference to them. He even uses Luther's image but to a different end:

> Ob er (the author) wol nicht den Grund leget des Glaubens, wie er selbst zeuget ... so bauet er doch fein drauf, Gold, Silber, Edelsteine ... Derhalben uns nicht hindern soll, ob vielleicht etwa Holz Stroh oder Heu mit untergemenget werde, sondern solche feine Lehre mit allen Ehren aufnehmen; ohne dass man sie den apostolischen Episteln nicht allerdinge gleichen mag.

And now therefore though this Epistle ... lay not the ground of the faith of Christ, yet buildeth it cunningly thereon pure gold, silver, and precious stones

And seeing the Epistle agreeth to all the rest of the Scripture (if it be indifferently looked to), why should it not be authority and taken for Holy Scripture?

Tyndale's indepen-Old Testament.

No one who has followed thus far Tyndale's dence in the mode of dealing with the New Testament can doubt that in the Old Testament he would look first to the Hebrew text, 'which,' he writes, 'is 'most of need to be known';' and a crucial test at once offers itself. An appendix to his New Testament of 1534 contains, as we have seen, 'The 'Epistles from the Old Testament according to the 'use of Salisbury.' Among these are passages from books which he had not published at that time, even if he had translated them, and from others which he certainly never translated. In the service-books they were of course given in Latin, and it would be most obvious, therefore, to turn them from the Vulgate text. If however in this case Tyndale took the Hebrew as his basis, and not the Latin, and still less Luther, we may be sure that he followed the like course in his continuous translations. And so it is: though he keeps the explanatory words which in some cases introduce or round off the lesson, yet the lesson itself is rendered from the original Hebrew. Two CHAP. examples will be sufficient to make it plain that INTERNAL it is so. In a very simple passage, I Kings xvii. 17ff. the following variations occur where Tyndale strives to keep close to the Hebrew against the Vulgate:

iniquitates meæ...

a high chamber...

cænaculum

21 he measured the child... expandit se atque mensus

est super puerum...

A single verse from Isaiah offers, as might be expected, a more conclusive proof of the independence of Tyndale:

My righteousness is nigh, and my salvation shall go out, and mine arm shall judge nations, and islands shall look for me, and shall tarry after mine arm.

Prope est justus meus, Is. li. 5. egressus est salvator meus, et brachia mea populos judicabunt: me insulæ exspectabunt, et brachium meum sustinebunt.

The variations from Luther are nearly as numerous. and still there are indications that Tyndale was acquainted with Luther's translation as he was with the Vulgate.

One continuous passage may be added as a better sample of Tyndale's work, taken from his

CHAP, published Pentateuch. The relation in which it INTERNAL stands to the Vulgate and Luther is, as will be · seen, the same as before1:

Revision of Old Testament.

In his version of the New Testament we have seen that Tyndale willingly faced the labour of minute correction. The texts of 1525, 1534 and 1535 are specifically distinct, and each later edition offers a careful revision of that which preceded it. Though the evidence is less extensive in the case of the Old Testament, it is evident that he expended no less pains upon this. The texts of 'the 'Epistles from the Old Testament' appended to the New Testaments of 1534 and 1535 differ in small details from the published Pentateuch of 15311; and, what is still more interesting, from CHAP. one another2. Thus in these, as in the New Testa-INTERNAL ments themselves, there is a double revision: and there is nothing to shew that Tyndale bestowed less care upon the lessons from the Apocrypha than on those from the Canonical books3:

The last Epistle (for St Catharine's day) is wrongly given in 1534, Ecclus. li. 9-12. The right lesson is substituted in 1535, Ecclus, li. r-8.

Two most surprising misprints of 1534 are also corrected in 1535: stated in Anderson's list: cf. p. 270.

CHAP, conception and style of his renderings he had INTERNAL nothing to modify or amend. Throughout all his revisions he preserved intact the characteristics of his first work. Before he began he had prepared himself for a task of which he could apprehend the full difficulty. He had rightly measured the momentous issues of a vernacular version of the Holy Scriptures, and determined once for all the principles on which it must be made. His later efforts were directed simply to the nearer attainment of his ideal. To gain this end he availed himself of the best help which lay within his reach, but he used it as a master and not as a disciple. In this work alone he felt that substantial independence was essential to success. In exposition or exhortation he might borrow freely the language or the thought which seemed suited to his purpose, but in rendering the sacred text he remained throughout faithful to the instincts of a scholar. From first to last his style and his interpretation are his own, and in the originality of Tyndale is included in a large measure the originality of our English Version. For not only did Tyndale contribute to it directly the substantial basis of half of the Old Testament (in all probability) and of the whole of the New, but he established a standard of Biblical translation which others followed. It is even of less moment that by far the greater INTERNAL part of his translation remains intact in our present Bibles1, than that his spirit animates the whole. He toiled faithfully himself, and where he failed he left to those who should come after the secret of success. The achievement was not for one but for many; but he fixed the type according to which the later labourers worked. His influence decided that our Bible should be popular and not literary, speaking in a simple dialect, and that so by its simplicity it should be endowed with permanence. He felt by a happy instinct the potential affinity between Hebrew and English idioms, and enriched our language and thought for ever with the characteristics of the Semitic mind².

§ 2. COVERDALE.

Coverdale's Bible a secondary translation.

The contrast between Tyndale and Coverdale has been already pointed out; and in spite of all that has been written to the contrary it is impossible to grant to Coverdale's Bible a place among independent translations. In fact Coverdale distinctly disavows the claim for himself. 'I have.' he writes to the king in his dedication, 'with a clear con-'science purely and faithfully translated this out of 'five sundry interpreters, having only the manifest 'truth of the Scripture before mine eyes...'' 'To 'help me herein,' he informs 'the Christian reader,' 'I have had sundry translations, not only in Latin 'but also of the Dutch [German] interpreters, 'whom, because of their singular gifts and special 'diligence in the Bible, I have been the more glad 'to follow for the most part, according as I was 'required 2.' 'Lowly and faithfully,' he adds, 'have 'I followed mine interpreters and that under cor-'rection".' And so it was that the title-page of his Bible which was printed with it described it as 'faithfully translated out of Latin and Dutch4.'

If the title-page, said one who had not seen it, runs so, 'it contains a very great 'misrepresentation'.' To another the notice appears to be a piece of advertising tact. diency, a third supposes, led Coverdale to underrate his labours. And yet it may be readily shewn that the words are simply and literally true. Coverdale certainly had some knowledge of Hebrew2 by which he was guided at times in selecting his rendering; but in the main his version is based on the Swiss-German version of Zwingli and Leo

Whittaker, Historical Inquiry, p. 50 n. In support of this hold statement Dr Whittaker quotes four passages from Coverdale (pp. 52 ff.), and compares them with all the versions which, as he affirms, he could have consulted. As Coverdale differs from these, he is pronounced to have translated 'from 'the Hebrew and from nothing 'else' (p. 50). Unhappily Dr Whittaker was not acquainted with the German-Swiss Version -a sufficiently famous bookfrom which they are all rendered. Ex. xxxiv. 30: Num. x. 31: Is.

His fifth version may have been the Worms German Bible of 1529, or the Latin Bible of Rudelius with marginal renderings from the Hebrew (1527, 1529), or (as is most likely), for he does not specify that his 'five interpreters' are all Latin or German, the published English translations of Tyndale to which he elsewhere refers.

Coverdale's translation

The examination of a few chapters will place of Malachi. the primary dependence of Coverdale in the Old Testament on the Zurich Bible beyond all doubt. Thus in the four short chapters of Malachi there are about five-and-twenty places where he follows the German against the Hebrew and Vulgate. Three sample instances may be quoted. In i. 4, it is said 'they shall be called The border of 'wickedness.' in the Hebrew and Latin as in the Authorised Version, but in Coverdale 'A cursed ' 'land,' a literal translation of the German. Again in i. 13, 'it is weariness to me,' a single word, but in Coverdale and the German we read 'it is but 'labour and travail.' Once again in iii. 8, 'will a 'man rob God?' is represented in Coverdale and the German by 'should a man use falsehood and deceit 'with God?' And such coincidences occur not in one book only but throughout the Old Testament¹. CHAP. III.

But at the same time on rare occasions Coverdale INTERNAL prefers to follow some one of the other translations which he consulted. Thus in two passages, ii. 3; 14, 15, of which the latter is a very remarkable one, he adopts the renderings of Pagninus and Luther in preference to those of the Zurich Bible.

It is not therefore surprising that notwithstand- General character of his acknowledged partiality for the German his Bible.

His Pentateuch may, indeed, unless a partial examination has misled me, be fairly described as the Zurich translation rendered into English by the help of Tyndale, with constant reference to Luther, Pagninus and the Vulgate. In the remaining books of the Old Testament the influence of the

The New Testament is a very favourable specimen of his labour. Its basis is Tyndale's first edition, but this he very carefully revised by the help of the second edition2 and yet more by the German. Thus on a rough calculation of changes. not simply of form or rhythm, more than threefourths of the emendations introduced by Coverdale into Tyndale's version of I John are derived from Luther, but the whole number of changes, and they are nearly all verbal, is, if I have counted rightly, only a hundred and twenty-three.

The changes are such as would easily have been made while the book was passing through the press.

¹ His various renderings throw great light on the authorities which he consulted. These are traced to their sources in App.

² In I John he appears to follow the first and second editions where they differ in about an equal number of places. But it is evident that the first edition was his foundation, for he follows instinct of discrimination which is scarcely less precious than originality, and a delicacy of ear INTERNAL which is no mean qualification for a popular translator. It would be an interesting work to note the subtle changes of order and turns of expression which we owe to him. In the epistle from which most of our illustrations have been taken 'the pride of life' and 'the world passeth away,' are immeasurable improvements on Tyndale's 'the 'pride of goods,' and 'the world vanisheth away;' and the rendering 'shutteth up his heart,' (due to Luther) is as much more vigorous than Tyndale's 'shutteth up his compassion' as it is more touching than the strange combination of the Authorised Version 'shutteth up his bowels of compassion?

Coverdale has a tendency to diffuseness, which in some places (as Ecclus. xliv.) leads him to long paraphrases of his text. The fault is one from which the Zurich Bible also suffers, and he may have fallen into it from imitating the style of his model too closely even when he abandoned its words. But his phrasing is nearly always rich and melodious. The general character of his version as compared with that of Tyndale may be very fairly represented by that of the Prayer Book

His account of his work.

Just as Coverdale valued highly the existence of many translations2 so he claimed for himself the right to extend this characteristic of diversity to his own work. He thought that he could thus attain comprehensiveness by variety, and secure in some measure for one translation the advantages which he found in many. 'Whereas 'the most famous interpreters of all give sundry 'judgments of the text, so far as it is done by 'the spirit of knowledge in the Holy Ghost, me-'think no man should be offended thereat, for 'they refer their doings in meekness to the Spirit 'of truth in the congregation of God...Be not thou 'offended therefore, good reader, though one call 'a scribe that other calleth a lawyer; or elders 'that other calleth father and mother; or repent-· ance that another calleth penance or amendment... In crises of great trial it is Bible. harder to sympathize with many views than with one. There is a singularity which is the element of progress; but there is a catholicity which is the condition of permanence; and this Coverdale felt. 'As the Holy Ghost is one working in thee 'and me as He will, so let us not swerve from 'that unity but be one in Him. And for my 'part I ensure thee I am indifferent to call it 'as well with the one term as with the other, so 'long as I know that it is no prejudice nor in-'jury to the meaning of the Holy Ghost...2' He may have carried his respect for some so-called 'Ecclesiastical' words to an excessive length, but even in this repect his merit was substantial. congregation, favour, elder; but it was no less well that the old words, and with them the historical teaching of many centuries, should not be wholly lost from our Bibles. That they were not lost was due to the labours of Coverdale; but his influence was felt not so much directly through his own first bible, as through Matthew's Bible, in which a large portion of it was incorporated, and still more through the Great Bible, in which he revised more than once his own work and that of Tyndale with which it had been joined.

The books in the N. T. follow the same order as before.

The edition of 1550 follows the order of that of 1537.

The edition of 1537 is described as being 'newly over-'seen and corrected;' but as far as I have been able to compare the texts the differences which are not accidental are few and unimportant. In 1 John I have noted only the following:-

- i. 1 of the life (of life 1535). 7 is light (is in light).
- ii. 14 the wicked (that wicked). 28 be ashamed (be made ashamed).
- iii. 18 my children (my little children).
- iv. 3 the spirit (that spirit).
- v. 10 because...of his Son. Omitted in 1535.
 - 11 the record (that record).
- I have not collated any considerable passages of the Pentatench with Matthew, though it would be interesting to compare a complete book in the Pentateuchs of 1531 and 1534 with Matthew (1537). The text of Matthew's New Testament is examined below, p. 232.

Thus Strype, following Bale, relates that Rogers 'translated the Bible [in this 'edition] into English from Genesis to the end 'of Revelations, making use of the Hebrew, Greek, 'Latin, German and English (that is Tyndale's) 'copies.' He also it is said 'added prefaces and 'notes out of Luther, and dedicated the whole 'book to king Henry, under the name of Thomas 'Matthews (sic) by an epistle prefixed, minding 'to conceal his own name'.' No description could well be more inaccurate. More than a third of the book is certainly Coverdale's. The Preface to the Apocrypha is translated from that in the French Bible of Olivetan2. The Prologue to the Romans is Tyndale's. The dedication is signed by Thomas Matthew. It is evident that no dependence can be placed on the details of such Foxe has evidently wrought out into a story the simple fact that Tyndale, Coverdale and Rogers were all engaged upon the work.

But although these original statements are thus Rogerseditloose, and I have been unable to find any more trustworthy, it can scarcely be doubted that Rogers did superintend Matthew's Bible, and used in it the materials which Tyndale had prepared, and that work in the interval between the publication of his The version Pentateuch and his death. The version of Jonah was an exceptional work, and furnishes no ground for supposing that he did not intend to proceed regularly through the Old Testament. Perhaps, too, it was from the exceptional character of this translation, which was as it were a text for the prologue, that Rogers was led to adopt Coverdale's version of Jonah as well as of the other prophets, though he could not have been ignorant of Tyndale's work; and the fact that Coverdale had used Tyndale's rendering diligently left no overpowering reason for abandoning him.

We are not however left wholly to conjecture in determining the authorship of the original por-Matthw's tion of Matthew's Bible. The 'Epistles of the Old 'Testament' added to Tyndale's New Testament of 1534, contain several passages from the historical books as well as from the Pentateuch; and generally it may be said that these fragments still it is evident that the renderings are not independent. It is of course possible that Rogers may have consulted the fragments in the execution of his work, but, as will appear directly, this supposition is practically inadmissible, because the corresponding sections from the Prophets and the Apocrypha are completely neglected.

Two examples will illustrate the extent of the Examples. coincidence and variations between the versions, and serve to shew how much dependence can be placed on this indication of the identity of their authorship.

To these versions that of Coverdale¹ may be added for comparison. The differences from both the others are marked: 'After these acts the son of 'the wife of the house was sick, and his sickness was so exceeding sore that there remained no

The second example is similar in character:

These versions may again be compared with Coverdale's: 'And he laid him down and slept under the juniper tree; and behold the angel touched him and said unto him Stand up and eat. And he looked about him, and behold at his head there was a bread baken on the coals and a cruse with water. And when he had eaten and drunken he laid him down again to sleep. And the angel of the Lord came again the second time and touched him and said Stand up and eat, for thou hast a great way to go!.'

It must be remembered in considering these fragments that they are taken from simple narratives, where there is comparatively little scope for striking variations². But even so, as far as

This collection includes (if I have counted rightly) twenty-three lessons from the prophets and six from the Apocrypha, besides others from the Pentateuch and Hagiothose which I have examined grapha. ¹ I am unable to speak of the style of the two groups of books -the Pentateuch and Joshua--2 Chron. A careful comparison of the versions in this respect could not fail to be fruitful; but to be of any value it must be minute. I can find nothing but vague generalities in the authors to whom I have referred.

The text of Matthew's Bible only provisional.

It is then evident that Rogers did not undertake an elaborate revision of the texts of Tyndale and Coverdale which he adopted. Still there are some changes in the version which are unquestionably intentional (e.g. Prov. i. 1, Is. i. 1), and numerous various readings in the margin (e.g. Ps.

The characters in 'Solomon's Ballet' (Canticles) are distinguished by rubricated headings. But the distinguishing feature of the edition is the marginal commentary on which the chief labour of the editor was bestowed. This however belongs rather to the history of doctrine than to the history of the English Bible¹. And when this is set aside the textual peculiarities of the edition are unimportant. In itself Matthew's Bible has had no original and independent influence upon the authorized text. Its great work was to present the earlier texts in a combined form which might furnish the common basis of later revisions. in this respect it is most unjust to call it Tyndale's Bible. If regard be had to the books taken from each it is in its primitive form hardly less Coverdale's than Tyndale's, though (if we except

The New Testament taken from Tyndales revision of 1535.

There is still one point in the history of of Matthew Matthew's Bible which is of considerable interest. The text of the New Testament differs considerably in details from Tyndale's revised edition of 1534. This fact has lent colour to the belief that Rogers revised the text of the Bible throughout, for it has been assumed that Tyndale did not again revise his own work. The assumption and the conclusion were equally wrong. It has been seen already that the remarkable New Testament of 1535 was again, as the title-page affirms, 'diligently 'corrected and compared with the Greek,' and this last revision, and not that of 1534, was adopted by Rogers. The differences which exist between Matthew and this last Testament of Tyndale are very slight and can be explained in most cases by the supposition of accidental errors: their agreement on the other hand extends to the adoption of some certain mistakes. A complete collation remains yet to be made, but on an examination of a large number of passages I have not found any characteristic reading of the edition of 1535 which does not also appear in Matthew's Bible of 1537'. From internal evidence it seems CHAP.

¹ The following collation of Tyndale's Testaments of 1534, 1535, and Matthew of 1537 in Mark xvi. and the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians will justify in all respects the statements made in the text. Münster's cdition his chief help in the Old Testa-ment.

It is obvious that a man who thus describes his plan is not the mere press-corrector of another's revision, but himself the editor of the entire work1. If there were any doubt remaining it would be removed by the character of the revision. About the time when Coverdale's own Version was passing through the press a new Latin Version of the Old Testament with the Hebrew text and a commentary chiefly from Hebrew sources was published by S. Münster (1534-5). It does not appear that at that time Coverdale was able to avail himself of it. The Zurich Version was sufficient. But a very slight comparison of Münster with the Zurich Bible could not fail to bring out the superior clearness of the former. Even a poor Hebrew scholar must feel its general faithfulness. Thus

This was an edition of the Great Bible. This passage also explains the anecdote which he gives of the criticism and revision of 'Coverdale's Bible.' See p. 254, n. 2.

¹ It is a very important confirmation of this view that Fulke speaks of the Bible of 1562 'most 'used in the Church Service in 'King Edward's time' as 'Doc-'tor Coverdale's translation.' (Defence of Eng. Trans. p. 68).

Coverdale found an obvious method to follow. He CHAP. III. revised the text of Matthew, which was laid down INTERNAL as the basis, by the help of Münster. The result was the Great Bible.

One difficult passage given in full will be sufficient to shew the certainty of this explanation of the origin of the text of the Great Bible, and for the interest of the comparison the Zurich original of Coverdale's translation is added.

It is possible that the unsettled prospect of affairs in Paris may have induced him to hurry the printing of the book; or, which is not less likely, the greater difficulty of the Prophets may have hindered him from dealing satisfactorily with them on the first collation. However this may be, the text of Cranmer's Bible presents a second revision of the original Coverdale (Matthew), and that again made by a more thorough use of Münster. A single chapter of Isaiah will shew the relation of the two revisions to one another, to the original rendering (Coverdale) and to Münster. From these collations the general character of General results. the versions of the Old Testament in the first two editions of the Great Bible will be sufficiently clear, though a fuller examination would probably bring out some details of the method of revision into more distinct prominence. The variations from the first edition (Crumwell's 1539) in the second (Cranmer's, April 1540) are far greater in the Hagiographa and the Prophets—the part of Matthew's

Bible which was Coverdale's own work-than those INTERNAL in the earlier books; and the variations of the text of 1539 from that of Matthew (1537) are more important throughout than the changes introduced afterwards¹. In other words the edition of April 1540 exhibits a text formed on the same principles as that of the edition of 1539, but after a fuller and more thorough revision2.

Revision of edition of

After April 1540 the text of the Great Bible Nov. 1540. does not appear to have been systematically revised throughout, but still it is a remarkable and unobserved fact that in parts the edition of Nov. 1540 goes back from the text of April 1540 to that of 1530, so that the edition of April 1540 exhibits the greatest approximation to Münster. It is impos-

> 1 By some incredible inadvertence Mr Anderson describes Crumwell's Bible as having Matthew's text. The edition of April 1530 and the London reprint of April 1540 (Petyt and Redman) are both carefully revised texts, as has been shewn already. The latter presents some variations from Crumwell's Bible, but they appear to be due rather to the printers than to any special revision: e. g. Ps. li. 14: O God, O God of my health: sing thy righteousness. 15 shew forth.

² This revision, as well as the partial one to be mentioned afterwards, was due to Coverdale, as appears from his Sermon quoted by Fulke (p. 08). 'M. Cover-'dale defended his translation, ' confessing that he did now him-'self espy some faults which if 'he might review it once over 'again, as he had done twice ' before, he doubted not but to 'amend.' This statement can only apply to Crumwell's and Cranmer's Bibles. The changes in the one revision of Coverdale's original Bible are not of sufficient importance to be thus sible to tell without a wide collation on what prinched CHAP. III. ciple this reaction was carried out: a few exam-internal ples will exhibit its reality.

An analysis of the variations in the first Epistle of St John may furnish a type of its general character. As nearly as I can reckon there are seventy-one differences between Tyndale's text (1534) and that of the Great Bible¹: of these forty-three come directly from Coverdale's earlier revision (and in a great measure indirectly from the Latin): seventeen Use of the Vulgate. from the Vulgate where Coverdale before had not followed it: the remaining eleven variations are fewer (see p. 233 n. 1), but I have not a complete table of them.

¹ The differences between the Great Bible and Matthew are from other sources. Some of the new readings INTERNAL from the Vulgate are important, as for example the additions in i. 4. 'that ve may rejoice and that your 'iov may be full.' ii. 23, 'he that knowledgeth the 'Son hath the Father also.' iii. I, 'that we should 'be called and be indeed the sons of God.' v. 9. 'this is the witness of God that is greater.' All these additions (like v. 7) are marked distinctly as Latin readings1: of the renderings adopted from Coverdale one is very important and holds its place in our present version. iii. 24, 'Hereby we know 'that he abideth in us, even by the Spirit which he 'hath given us,' for which Tyndale reads: 'there-'by we know that there abideth in us of the 'Spirit which he gave us.' One strange blunder also is corrected; 'that old commandment which 'ye heard' (as it was in the earlier texts) is replaced by the true reading: 'that old commandment which 'ye have had' (ii. 7). No one of the new renderings is of any moment (ii. 8, 18, 19, 20, 22, &c.)

Use of the version of Erasmus.

As an illustration of the influence of Erasmus we may recur to the collation of his differences

1 One false rendering introduced into this version from the Latin has most unfortunately retained its place in our present Bible: 'there shall be one fold 'and one shepherd' (John x. 16), for 'one flock' of the earlier translators. The old Latin right--ly distinguished between grex and ovile, but the distinction was lost in the later texts.

from Tyndale in Col. ii. In the following readings, nearly half of those noted, the text of the Great INTERNAL Bible is altered from that of Tyndale (Matthew) toconformity with Erasmus: 'I for I would: how great 'care: 2 when they are knit together: 6 walk...so 'that we be rooted and built in him: II forasmuch 'as we have put off: 13 through sin and through... '16 or of the new moon: 17 which are shadows: 23 ' by superstition and humbleness, and by hurting of the 'body...' Some of these renderings might have been derived independently from the Greek or from the Vulgate; others could not, as we must believe, have occurred to two original interpreters; and when they are taken as a whole there can be no doubt as to their immediate source2.

The New Testament in the Great Bible of 1539 The New was subject to a revision before the edition of 1540 also revised in 1540.

Col. i. 10...that in all things ye may please (Erasm. ut per omnia placeatis).

Col. iii. 9 ... seeing that ye have put off (Erasm. posteaguam exnistis). The Latin New Testament of Erasmus was printed with the English of Matthew in 1538. The English Testament of 1540, said to be from the Latin of Erasmus, I have not seen.

² One or two other passages may be added in which the Great Bible certainly follows Erasmus:

Luke xix, 42...even in this thy day, thou wouldest take heed (Erasm. curares).

I Pet. i. 14...lusts by which ye were led when as yet ye were ignorant of Christ (Erasm. quibus dum adhuc ignoraretis Christum agebamini).

Greater use of Erasmus. for the Old Testament Erasmus was in a great measure for the New. How powerful his influence was in the original recension has been just seen, and the review shews additional traces of the sway which his judgment exercised over Coverdale. One or two examples may be quoted:¹

these for the analysis all suspicion of partial selection is removed.

No change perhaps is more remarkable than CHAP. that in the difficult and famous passage of Stinternal James1:

MAY, NOV. 1540.

For as God cannot be tempted with evil, neither he himself tempt the [tempteth] any man. (Nam Deus ut malis tentari non potest, ita nec ipse quemquam tentat. Er.)

In other cases the revision follows the Vulgate Of the (with Erasmus) where the original text had deserted it, as for example:

No attempt seems to have been made to substitute the Psalter of the Bishops' Bible for that of the Great Bible: and when, upon the last revision of the Prayer Book (1662), it was directed that the other lessons from Scripture should be taken from the royal Version, a special exception was made in favour of the Psalter. The choirs and congregations had grown familiar with it, and it was felt to be 'smoother 'and more easy to sing'.'

A very slight comparison of the Psalter in the Character-Prayer Book with that in the Bible will shew from this Psalwhat this acknowledged smoothness springs. Apart

CHAP. TTT HISTORY.

INTERNAL the later version will be seen to be distinguished from the earlier by a scrupulous fidelity to the Hebrew text. Coverdale, like Luther and the Zurich translators on whose model his style was formed, allowed himself considerable freedom in dealing with the shape of the original sentences. At one time a word is repeated to bring out the balance of two clauses: at another time the number is changed: at another time a fuller phrase is supplied for the simple copula, now a word is resolved, and again a particle or an adverb or a pronoun or even an epithet is introduced for the sake of definiteness: there is in every part an endeavour to transfuse the spirit as well as the letter into the English rendering. The execution of the version undoubtedly falls far below the conception of it: the Authorised Version is almost in every case more correct: but still in idea and tone Coverdale's is as a whole superior, and furnishes a noble type for any future revision.

One or two examples will illustrate these general remarks. The materials for extending the comparison are accessible to all, and nothing throws more light on the actual history of our Bible1.

§ 5. TAVERNER.

CHAP.

The work of Taverner is very different from INTERNAL that of any of the revisers noticed before, and Its revision of stamped with a very distinct individuality. the Old character might be anticipated from the descrip-Testament tion of the man himself which has been already quoted1. Throughout he appears to aim at vigorous and idiomatic language, and his New Testament at least deserves more attention than has yet been paid to it. Probably he undertook this part of the work, for which his scholarship fitted him, first, and only afterwards extended his labours to the Old Testament, for which he had no special aptitude. As far as I have observed he used no help but the Vulgate in the Old Testament, and this only partially². But scarcely a page perhaps will fail to shew changes which are made for the sake of clearness and force. Thus 'the child of death' becomes 'worthy of death' (2 Sam. xii. 5): 'of mine own mind' is altered to 'of mine own head' (Num. xvi. 28): 'but and if' is made simply 'but if': 'like as a branch' simply 'like a branch'.

and so on. But in a passage like Is. liii. 1-5, where Coverdale is greatly at fault, he introduces INTERNAL no real change in the text before him¹.

> In the New Testament Taverner aims equally at compression and vividness, but he was familiar with the original, and therefore could deal more happily with the translation of Tyndale, which still, like Coverdale, he followed very closely. A few verses will shew the method which he followed. Thus in the beginning of St John's Gospel for 'the same' he reads 'this' (i. 2, 7), for to 'bear witness' simply 'witness' (7, 15); for Tyndale's 'verity' he writes 'truth' (14); for Tyndale's 'confessed and 'denied not, and said plainly' he repeats the first word as in the Greek 'confessed and denied not 'and confessed' (20). Sometimes in his anxiety to keep to the Greek text he becomes even obscure or inaccurate, as 'all were made by it' (2), 'to be 'made the sons of God believing on his name' (12), 'into his own' (II), 'he was first ere I was' (II). But he introduced substantial improvements into Tyndale's Pentateuchs of 1530, 1534 with one another and also with Matthew and Coverdale. Matthew appears to follow the edition of 1530 almost without exception: Coverdale, generally that of 1534. I have not however verified the collations.

¹ In Mr Offor's MS, collections for a history of the English Bible (Brit. Mus. 26,670-3) there is a collation of Tyndale's Pentateuch (1537, 1549) with Taverner (1539, 1551), Vol. 1E. pp. 153-158. The same MS: contains also a collation of the translation by his regard for the article: 'that CHAP. 'was the true light (a tr. l. Tynd.) which...coming INTERNAL 'into...' (9): 'Art thou the Prophet?' (21, 25): 'I 'am a voice of one crying...' (23). Two consecutive verses of the first Epistle of St John furnish. good examples of his endeavour to find English equivalents for the terms before him. All the other versions adopt the Latin 'advocate' in I John ii. I, for which Taverner substitutes the Saxon 'spokesman.' Tyndale, followed by Coverdale, the Great Bible, &c. strives after an adequate rendering of ίλασμὸς (I John ii. 2), in the awkward periphrasis 'he it is that obtaineth grace for our sins': Taverner boldly coins a word which if insufficient is yet worthy of notice: 'he is a mercystock for our sins.'

It would be tempting to dwell longer on this version, but it appears to have exercised no influence whatever on the later revisions. It remains simply as a monument of one man's critical power, and in the very sharp personality of its characteristics is alien from the general history of the English Bible.

text. Under the influence of Calvin, Geneva had become the seat of a society of devoted Biblical students, and the results of their labours were made available for the review of the English version by the Marian persecution. The more conservative party among the refugees might have scrupled to use them without reserve, but no such feeling could hold back the seceders from Frankfurt. For the first time the task of emendation was undertaken by men who were ready to press it to the uttermost. They spoke of their position as providential, and in looking back upon the later results of their Bible we can thankfully acknowledge that it was so. They enjoyed, as they say in their preface, many advantages over earlier labourers whose renderings 'required greatly to be perused 'and reformed.' 'Not,' they add, 'that we vindi-'cate anything to ourselves above the least of our 'brethren, for God knoweth with what fear and 'trembling we have been now (April 1560) for the 'space of two years and more day and night occu-'pied herein, but being earnestly desired. ...and 'seeing the great opportunity and occasions which 'God presented unto us in this Church, by reason of

Some important versions indeed had been pub-New Latin lished in addition to those which have been noticed already as accessible to the first translators. Leo Leo Juda. Juda, who had contributed greatly to the German Bible of Zurich, laboured for many years at a new Latin Version of the Old Testament. This was left unfinished at his death (1542), but the work was completed by T. Bibliander and C. Pellican. P. Cholin added a translation of the Apocrypha: R. Gualther revised Erasmus' Latin New Testament; and the whole Bible, thus finished, was printed in 1544. The version is vigorous, aiming rather at an intelligible sense, than at a literal rendering of the words of the original. Castalio (Cha- castalia, teillon) carried this freedom to a far greater length, and in his singularly elegant version (1551) endeayoured to make the Hebrew writers speak in purely classical Latin. In spite of Beza's vehement assaults Castalio exercised some effect on later Protestant versions; but the New Testament of his great adversary (1556) exercised a far more powerful influence than either of these complete Bibles. INTERNAL Beza made some use of the various readings of Greek Manuscripts which had been collected in a convenient form by Stephens in his Greek Testament of 1550 (ed. regia); but as yet, in spite of the great advances which had been made in scholarship, the true principles of Greek criticism were wholly unknown, and the text which served as the basis of translation was as faulty as before.

Revision of the French Version

These Latin versions, especially Beza's New Testament, contributed important help to the English revisers; but it was of still greater moment that they were associated at Geneva with a group of scholars who were already engaged in the work of correcting the French Version of Olivetan. As early as 1545 Calvin cursorily revised this Bible. chiefly, as it is said, in points of style and expression. In 1551 he went over the work again more thoroughly; and again in 1558. The edition of 1551 contained a new version of the Psalter by L. Budé and of the Apocrypha by Beza. But these successive revisions were confessedly provisional, and it was not till 1588 that the version appeared which, bearing the name 'of the venerable 'company of pastors at Geneva,' remained for a

Thus the English exiles found themselves surrounded by those who were engaged in a task character similar to their own². They started indeed with a van Verfar better foundation than the French revisers, Old Testaand their labours shew no impatient desire for change. In the historical books they preserved in the main the old rendering, altering here and there an antiquated word or a long periphrasis3. In the Hagiographa, the Prophets, and the poetic books of the Apocrypha, the changes were necessarily far more numerous. An analysis of the new readings in a few representative passages will place the general character of the revision in a clear light.

¹ For these details I am indebted to Le Long, as I have been unable to obtain access to the editions of 1545 and 1551.

² A revised Italian version of the Bible appeared also at Geneva in 1562.

³ A small sign will shew the scholar's instinct, and this is found in the spelling and accentuation of the Hebrew names which is characteristic of the edition of 1560 as Iaakob, Izhák, Rebekáh, Joshúa, Zebulún, Abimélech, &c. Mr Aldis Wright called my attention to this significant peculiarity.

⁴ The text of the Great Bible is taken from the edition of 1550, which the revisers were most likely to use. The words altered in the Genevan version are italicized: those substituted for them are given afterwards.

And thou hast kept for him this great mercy, that thou hast given him a son to sit on his seat, as it is come to pass this day.
 - 7 And now, O Lord my God, it is thou that hast made thy servant king instead of David my father; and I am but young and wot not how to go out and in.
 - 8 And thy servant is in the midst of thy people, which thou hast chosen, and verily the people are so many that they cannot be told nor numbered for multitude.
 - 9 Give therefore unto thy servant an understanding heart to judge the people, that I may discern between good and bad; for who is able to judge this, thy so mighty a people.

Of these thirty alterations by far the largest part is due to the desire of greater literality: no less than thirteen can be traced to Pagninus (I—6, 9, 12, 15, 22, 26, 30), five to Münster (16, 17, 19, 23, 27), three perhaps to Leo Juda (13, 14, 24), two are original (18, 21). There is one new reading (10), and six changes are linguistic (7, 8, 11, 25, 28, 29).

In the Apocryphal books the influence of the CHAP. III.

The examples which have been given exhibit very fairly the method of revision which was INTERNAL adopted by the Genevan translators in the Old Testament. In all parts they took the Great Bible Summary of the chaas their basis and corrected its text, without ever substituting for it a new translation. Even where old Testathe changes are greatest the original foundation can still be traced, and the new work fairly harmonizes with the old. One chief aim of the revisers seems to have been to make the translation as nearly verbal as possible, and consequently in a great number of passages they replace the renderings of the Zurich scholars (Coverdale) or Münster by those of Pagninus. At the same time there is abundant evidence to shew that they were perfectly competent to deal independently with points of Hebrew scholarship; and minute changes in expression shew that they were not indifferent to style.

The history of the Genevan New Testament is The revisimpler than that of the Old. It is little more New Testathan the record of the application of Beza's trans-mainly on lation and commentary to Tyndale's Testament in three successive stages, first in the separate New Testament of 1557, next in the Bible of 1560, and lastly in the New Testament of L. They did not adopt all the alterations which he suggested; and at times they introduced original phrases; but by far the greater part of the changes which were made in the text of Tyndale were simply due to Beza².

The changes in 1 John.

An analysis of the changes in one short Epistle will render this plain. Thus according to as accurate a calculation as I can make more than two-thirds of the new renderings in I John introduced into the revision of 1560 are derived from Beza, and two-thirds of these then for the first time. The rest are due mainly to the revisers themselves³, and of these only two are found in the revision of 1557. Tomson adds barely five or six ¹ Tomson's New Testament presents the fullest form of Beza's influence. One peculiarity is characteristic of Tomson alone. In his anxiety to express the emphatic force of the Greek article he consistently renders it by 'that' or 'this,' and in many cases the effect is almost grotesque. One example will suffice: 'He that hath that Son hath 'that life: and he that hath not 'that Son of God hath not that 'life' (I John v. 12).

The basis of the Genevan Testament was certainly Tyndale's (the last text, i.e. Matthew) and not the Great Bible. See for instance Gal. i. 10, 14, 15, 19, 21: ii. 1, 2, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, &c. The corresponding coincidences of the Genevan Testament with the Great Bible against Tyndale are very few: Gal. i. 9, 12: ii. 4.

³ The most striking are: ii. 18, 19, 20, 29: iv. 5: v. 6.

closer approximations to Beza, of which one is important (v. 4 'hath overcome'); and once he defi- INTERNAL nitely goes against him (iv. 9 'Herein was that love 'of God made manifest amongst us').

CHAP.

The general conclusion thus indicated will be made still clearer by an examination of two short continuous passages. The differences between the first New Testament and the New Testament in the Bible (1560) will thus appear, and it will be seen that the revision in the latter extended to points of language as well as to points of interpretation¹:

- (TYNDALE, 1534.) 12 Remember, I say, that ye Eph. ii. were at that time without Christ, and were reputed aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and were strangers2 from the testaments of promise, and had no hope and were without God in this world.
- 13 But now in Christ Fesu ye which a while ago3 were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ.
- 1 It is very greatly to be regretted that the New Testament of 1557 and not the New Testament of the Bible has been reprinted in Bagster's Hexapla as the Genevan version. The confusion which has resulted from this error of judgment has led to endless mistakes in discussions on the authorised version. The Testament of 1557 has had no independent influence on the A.V. as far as I can see.

Thus it will be seen that the Testament (1557)

CHAP. differs from the Bible (1560) in nine places, half of INTERNAL the whole number (1, 2, 4, 7, 8, 12, 13, 17, 18), and of these variations two are of considerable importance (2, 17). In one case the Bible deserts Beza where the Testament followed him (13), one change is simply linguistic (7), but in the other seven cases the Bible is supported by Beza. Of the remaining nine changes common to the Testament and Bible five are in accordance with Beza (3, 9, 11, 14, 15), one is perhaps independent of him (6), and the remaining three are changes of expression (5, 10, 16). In this passage Tomson agrees with the Bible.

In this passage again Tomson's text agrees with that of the Bible¹. The Testament differs from it twice (3, 8), and in both cases the Bible agrees with Beza. The remaining nine changes are all, as far as the Latin can express them, in INTERNAL accordance with Beza, and one is evidently due to him (5).

Examples of right taken from Beza.

It is of more importance to place in a clear renderings light the real origin of the changes in the English Genevan New Testament because very many of them have passed from that into our own Bible, and it has been forgotten to whom the renderings are due. Thus Archbp. Trench quotes five passages to shew 1 'the very good and careful scholar-'ship brought to bear upon this [the Genevan] 'revision,' in which 'it is the first to seize the exact 'meaning...which all the preceding versons had 'missed.' They are all derived from Beza. In one case the English translator has adopted his alternative rendering: in the four others he simply takes Beza's translation:

> Luke xi. 17 one house shall (doth Great Bible) fall upon another (Tyndale GB.) domus adversus sese dissidens cadit (Beza.) a house divided against itself (an house T.) falleth (1557)

The credit of recognizing the right turning remains, but the Genevan translator can have no claim to original sagacity on this evidence.

To place the relation of the Genevan trans-

Of these which include four arbitrary corrections of the text the second and fourth and fifth have been incorporated in our present version: the first was abandoned by Beza in his third edition: the sixth is suggested in a note¹ and has modified the received rendering.

Beza's influence on the whole beneficial. A comparison of the two groups of passages will shew at once the strength and the weakness of Beza and so of the revisions which were moulded after him. In the interpretation of the text he was singularly clear-sighted: in the criticism of the CHAP. text he was more rash than his contemporaries in INTERNAL proportion as his self-reliance was greater. But HISTORY. though it is a far more grievous matter to corrupt the text than to misinterpret it, the cases in which Beza has corrected the renderings of former translators are incomparably more numerous than those in which he has introduced false readings; and on the whole his version is far superior to those which had been made before, and so consequently the Genevan revisions which follow it.

The notes of the Genevan Version contributed The notes so greatly to its influence that one or two of them nevan may be added which will be sufficient to shew the general character and scope of the commentary.

§ 7. THE BISHOPS' BIBLE.

The correspondence on the subject of the Bi-The design shops' Bible which has been already quoted explains the general design of the revisers¹. It was their object to remove from the Great Bible all errors which seemed to impair the sense, and at the same time to produce a popular and not a literary version. In both respects—in the alteration of the renderings and in the alteration of the language—they proposed at least in the first instance to confine themselves to necessary changes, for the revision was essentially conservative in its conception. But in the execution of the plan some of the revisers certainly made use of far wider liberty than the original scheme permitted.

The design unequally

The execution of the work is indeed, if a very carried out, partial examination may be trusted, extremely unequal; and the Greek scholarship of the revisers is superior to their Hebrew scholarship. How far the separate sections are marked by the special characteristics of the men engaged upon them I cannot say, and the inquiry is not one which would reward the labour which it would cost. Still the revision has received far less attention than it deserves, and in the New Testament it CHAP. shews considerable vigour and freshness.

The Prophets are altered very frequently, but in these the new renderings can generally be traced to some other source. The influence of the Genevan revision is perceptible throughout, but it is more obvious in the Prophets than elsewhere. Castalio was certainly consulted and had some influence with the revisers, but with the exception of the Genevan version itself no fresh sources were open to them in addition to those which the Genevan exiles had used1

One change is simply linguistic (9), and three are apparently original (4, 5, 6).

In a passage from the Psalms the reviser shews far greater originality and the influence of the Genevan revision is considerably less:

The revision of the New Testament more important than that of the Old.

HISTORY.

There is but little to recommend the original renderings of the Bishops' Bible in the Old Testament. As a general rule they appear to be arbitrary and at variance with the exact sense of the Hebrew text1. The revision of the New Testament however will repay careful study.

Notes.

Lawrence's Among the revisers was Lawrence, 'a man in 'those times of great fame for his knowledge in the 'Greek' of whose labours Strype has preserved a singularly interesting memorial in a series of 'notes of errors in the Translation of the N. T. 37 Some of these are worthy of quotation.

It is not known how far Lawrence's labours extended, but an examination of a difficult passage of an Epistle will prove that the reviser who corrected it was not deficient in originality and vigorous scholarship¹:

INTERNAL HISTORY.

Of these twenty-six variations no less than seventeen are new, while only nine are due to the Genevan version; and the character of the original corrections marks a very close and thoughtful revision based faithfully upon the Greek. The anxiously literal rendering of the particles (2) and prepositions (9, 11, 12, 15, 16) is specially worthy of notice: so too the observance of the order (19), and of the original form of the sentences (17, 18, 20, 23, 24), even where some obscurity follows from it. In four places the Authorised Version follows the Bishops' renderings (3, 4, 10, 25); and only one change appears to be certainly for the worse in which the rendering of the Genevan Testament has been followed (8 Beza ad coagmentationem). The singular independence of the revision as compared with those which have been noticed before is shewn by the fact that only four (3, 10, 11, 18) of the new changes agree with Beza and at least nine are definitely against him (4, 12, 15, 16, 17, 20, 23, 24, 25)1, tament, as far as I have been able to examine it, is unchanged, but that of the New Testament is carefully revised. As was natural this second edition was taken as the basis of the Authorised Version, though there are numerous cases in which the rendering of the edition of 1568 is restored there. The collation of a single epistle will shew the extent of the differences, and the proportion in which the respective readings were preferred by King James' revisers.

The Commentary. The notes in the Bishops' Bible differ generally in their character from those in the Genevan. They are shorter and more epigrammatic, and deal more frequently with the interpretation than with the application of the text. Yet there are in them, as will be seen even in the following examples, many dogmatic statements which are of importance in estimating the standard theology of the age. The

The Rhemish Bible, like Wycliffe's, lies properly outside the line of English Bibles, because The Rhemish Verit is a secondary translation based upon the Vul-sion a secondary gate. But it is nevertheless of considerable im-translation portance in the internal history of the authorised Vulgate. text, for it furnished a large proportion of the Latin words which King James' revisers adopted; and it is to this rather than to Coverdale's Testaments that we owe the final and most powerful action of the Vulgate upon our present Version.

The Rhemish translators give a very interesting The transand ingenious defence of their method, but they count of express no obligation to the earlier English translations which still formed the groundwork of their version¹. They take the current Latin Vulgate for

 - '10. It is not only better than all other Latin 'translations but than the Greek text itself in those 'places where they disagree...'

This last statement is supported by the argument that as the first heretics were Greeks, the Greek Scriptures suffered much at their hands. Further, it is shewn that many Latin readings are supported by ancient Greek authority; but it is also allowed that some errors had crept into the current text by the fault of scribes as in fide

Similar arguments applied to the Old Testament (1609).

In the Preface to the translation of the Old Testament the same arguments are repeated briefly. The Hebrew text is said to have been 'foully cor'rupted by the Jews,' as the Greek by heretics. But in the interval between the publication of the New and Old Testament an authoritative text of the Vulgate had been printed (by Clement VIII. 1592), and the English version of the Old Testament was made to agree with this. 'Only one 'thing we have done,' the editors say, 'touching 'the text...We have again conferred this English 'translation, and conformed it to the most perfect 'Latin edition'.'

Method of translation. Their choice of a text being thus defended³, the translators explain also the principles on which

I do not know what edition of the Vulgate they followed in the New Testament. It was probably one by Hentenius. The text differs from the Complutensian (Apoc. xvi. 7) and the Clementine (Apoc. xxii. 9).

³ It may be noticed that the translators retain without comment the interpolations in I Samuel; e.g. iv. 1; v. 6; x. 1; xiv. 22; xv. 12; xvii. 36.

INTERNAL Jerome's version of the Hebrew, but from his revision of the very faulty translation from the Septuagint, which commonly displaced it in Latin Bibles. As it stands, the Doway Bible is simply the ordinary, and not the pure, Latin text of Jerome in an English dress. Its merits, and they are considerable, lie in its vocabulary. The style, so far as it has a style, is unnatural, the phrasing is most unrhythmical, but the language is enriched by the bold reduction of innumerable Latin words to English service¹.

Examples from the Old Testament.

One or two examples will be sufficient to indicate its merits and defects:

The correspondence with the Latin text is thus absolutely verbal, and it is only through the Latin that the English in some places becomes intelligible. But on the other hand Jerome's own greatness as a translator is generally seen through the second version. A very familiar passage will shew how closely the rendering can approach our own even in the Prophets:

Is. ix.

- 6 For a little child is born to us and a son is given to us, and principality is made upon his shoulder, and his name shall be called Marvellous, Counsellor, God, Strong, Father of the world to come, the Prince of peace.

The Psalter is the most unsatisfactory part of The Psalter the whole book. Even where the sense is suffi-unsatisfacciently clear to remain distinct through three translations, from Hebrew to Greek, from Greek to Latin, from Latin to English, the stiff, foreign style sounds strangely unsuited to words of devotion; and where the Latin itself has already lost the sense, the English baffles understanding. One specimen of each kind may be added:

- 8 The Law of our Lord is immaculate converting Ps. xix. souls: the testimony of our Lord is faithful, giving wisdom to little ones.
- 9 The justices of our Lord be right, making hearts joyful: the precept of our Lord lightsome, illuminating the eyes.
- 10 The fear of our Lord is holy, permanent for ever and ever; the judgments of our Lord be true, justified in themselves.
- II To be desired above gold and much precious stone: and more sweet above honey and the honey comb.

This is not what a translation of the Psalms should be, but the following passage is positively painful from the ostentatious disregard of meaning in the words1:

- o As wax that melteth shall they be taken away; Ps. lvii. fire hath fallen on them, and they have not seen the sun.
 - 10 Before your thorns did understand the old briar: as living so in wrath he swalloweth them.

not forget, for with such hosts God is premerited1.

Such translations as these have no claim to be considered vernacular renderings of the text: exwhich have cept through the Latin they are unintelligible. But still they only represent what there was, in the Vulgate incapable of assimilation to an English version. And on the other hand a single Epistle furnishes the following list of Latin words which King James' translators have taken from the Rhemish Testament: separated (Rom. i. 1), consent (mg.) (i. 32), impenitent (ii. 5), approvest (ii. 18), propitiation (iii. 25), remission (id.), grace (iv. 4), glory in tribulations (v. 3), commendeth (v. 8), concupiscence (vii. 7), revealed (viii. 18), expectation (viii. 19), (conformable, viii. 29), confession is made unto salvation (x. 10), emulation (xi. 14), concluded (xi. 32), conformed (xii. 2), instant (xii. 12), contribution (xv. 26).

Some English words.

There are also rarer cases in which the Rhemists furnish a true English phrase which has been adopted since, as darkened (Rom. i. 21), foreknew (xi. 2); nor is overgoe (I Thess. iv. 6) unworthy of notice.

1 All the quotations are made from the first editions. In the later (Irish) editions of the 'Rhemes and Doway' Bible and New Testament there are considerable alterations, and the text is far nearer to that in the A. V. Examples are given by Dr Cotton, Rhemes and Doway ... Oxford. 1853, pp. 183 ff.

THE AUTHORISED VERSION.

CHAP. III. INTERNAL HISTORY.

The Rhemish Version of the New Testament, The study renewed.

supported by Martin's attack on the English Bible, had once again called attention to the importance of the Latin Vulgate before the revision of King James was undertaken. During the sixteenth century this had been in a great degree thrust out of sight by the modern translations of Erasmus and Beza, which had influenced respectively the Great and the Genevan Bibles. At the same time the study of Hebrew and Greek had been pursued with continued zeal in the interval which had elapsed since the publication of the Bishops' Bible; and two important contributions had been made to the interpretation of the Old Testament.

In 1572 Arias Montanus, a Spanish scholar not New Latin unworthy to carry on the work of Ximenes, added of the Old to the Antwerp Polyglott, which he edited by the Arias command of Philip II., an interlinear Latin translation of the Hebrew text, based on that of Pagninus, whose readings he added to his own. The translation is rigidly verbal, but none the less it helped to familiarize ordinary scholars with the exact forms of Hebrew idioms which were more or (1579), with a commentary, which rapidly obtained a very extensive currency. His son-in-law Junius added a translation of the Apocrypha. The whole Bible was completed by a translation of the New Testament by Tremellius from the Syriac; but for this the New Testament of Beza was frequently substituted.

Vernacular Versions.

Besides these works, which were designed for scholars, three important vernacular versions also had been published. In 1587-8 an authoritative revision of the French Bible was put forth by the 'venerable company of Pastors' at Geneva which was based upon a careful examination of the original texts. The chief part of the work is said to have been executed by B. C. Bertram, a Hebraist of distinguished attainments, and he was assisted by Beza, Goulart and others. An Italian transla-

Amsterdam in 1602 by C. de Valera. All these INTERNAL versions have an independent value, and when King HISTORY.

James' revisers speak of their pains in consulting 'the Spanish, French and Italian translators,' there can be no doubt that it is to these they refer¹.

Thus King James' revisers were well furnished with external helps for the interpretation of the Bible, and we have already seen that they were competent to deal independently with questions of Hebrew and Greek scholarship. Like the earlier translators they suffered most from the corrupt form in which the Greek text of the New Testament was presented to them. But as a whole their work was done most carefully and honestly. It is possible to point out inconsistencies of rendering and other traces of compromise, but even in the minutest details the translation is that of a Church and not of a party. It differs from the Rhemish Version in seeking to fix an intelligible sense on the words rendered: it differs from the Genevan Version in leaving the literal rendering uncoloured by any expository notes2. And yet it is most worthy of notice that these two Versions, representing as they INTERNAL do the opposite extremes of opinion, contributed most largely of all to the changes which the revisers introduced.

Use of the Genevan and Rhemish versions.

The important use which was made of the Rhemish and Genevan Versions shews that the revisers did not hold themselves to be closely bound by the instructions which were given them. These versions were not contained in the list which they were directed to consult; and on the other hand the cases are comparatively rare when they go back from the text of the Bishops' Bible to an earlier English rendering. If indeed they had not CHAP. interpreted liberally the license of judgment which INTERNAL was given them, they could not have accomplished their task. As it is their work is itself a monument of the catholicity of their design.

An examination of the chapter of Isaiah which has been traced through the earlier versions will exhibit more clearly than a general description the method by which the revision was guided and the extent to which it was modified by the different authorities which the revisers consulted. The text of the Bishops' Bible is of course taken as the basis.

BISHOPS' BIBLE, 1568, 1572. I But who hath given Is. liii. credence unto our preaching; or to whom is the

- 2 arm of the Lord known? For he did grow before the Lerd like as a branch and as a root in a dry ground: he hath neither bounty nor favour; when we look upon him there shall be no fairness; we 3 shall have no lust unto him. He is despised and
- abhorred of men: he is such a man as hath good experience of sorrows and infirmities: we have reckoned him so vile that we hid our faces from him:
- 4 Howbeit he only hath taken on him our infirmity and borne our pains: yet we did judge him as though he were plagued and cast down of God.

CHAP. III. INTERNAL HISTORY.

5 Whereas he [notwithstanding] was wounded for our offences, and smitten for our wickedness: for the pain of our punishment was laid upon him, 6 and with his stripes are we healed. As for us we are all gone astray like sheep, every one hath turned his own way; but the Lord hath thrown 7 upon him all our sins. He suffered violence and was evil intreated, and aid not open his mouth. He shall be led as a sheep to be slain, yet shall he be as still as a lamb before the shearer and not 8 open his mouth. From the prison and judgment was he taken, and his generation who can declare? For he was cut off from the ground of the living, which punishment did go upon him for 9 the transgression of my people. His grave was given him with the condemned, and with the rich man at his death, whereas he did never violence nor unright, neither hath there been any deceit-10 fulness in his mouth. Yet hath it pleased the Lord to smite him with infirmity, that when he had made his soul an offering for sin, he might see long lasting seed: and this device of the II Lord shall prosper in his hand. Of the travail and labour of his soul shall he see the fruit and be satisfied. My righteous servant shall with his knowledge justify the multitude, for he shall

Thus as far as the variations admit of being CHAP. reduced to a numerical form about seven-eighths INTERNAL are due to the Genevan version, either alone or in agreement with one or both of the Latin Versions. Analy Two renderings appear to be due to Tremellius changes. (4, 30): the same number to Pagninus (10, 32), including the noble rendering 'a man of sorrows 'and acquainted with grief.' Three times the Genevan translation is abandoned (30, 32, 33); and once the rendering appears to be independent (33). But throughout the most delicate care is given to the choice of words, and there is scarcely a verse which does not bear witness to the wisdom and instinctive sense of fitness by which it was guided, e.g. 2 no beauty... (3 a man of sorrows...) 4 our griefs ...stricken... 5 bruised... 7 as a lamb... 10 put him to grief... 12 transgressors. Even subtleties of rhythm are not to be disregarded, as 7 he opened not... 8 from prison... 12 numbered...; nor yet the endeavour after a more exact representation of the original, as 10 he shall ... 12 divide ...

The example which has been taken is undoubt- General edly an extreme one, but it only represents on an of the reexaggerated scale the general relation in which the Authorised Version stands to the Genevan and Bishops' Bibles in the Prophetical books. In the CHAP. Historical, and even in the Poetical books, it is far III.

INTERNAL less divergent from the Bishops' Bible. In the HISTORY. Apocrypha it is, as far as I can judge, nearer to the Bishops' Bible than to the Genevan, but marked by many original changes. A passage from Wisdom, which has been already examined, will be sufficient to shew the character of the revision in this part of the Bible, and the independent freedom with which the reviser performed his work.

Of these changes three seem to be due to Junius (10, 11, 25) and perhaps four others (1, 6, 7, 23): two to the Genevan version (4, 18), and perhaps two others (16, 17): the remainder are either linguistic (3, 5, 8, 12, 19) or closer renderings of the Greek (2, 9, 13—15, 20—22, 24).

The marginal renderings offer a certain clue to The margithe authorities on which the revisers chiefly relied; ings in and an analysis of those given in Malachi fully confirms the conclusions which have been already obtained.

The revision of the New Testament was a simpler work than that of the Old, and may be New Testagenerally described as a careful examination of the Bishops' Version (1572) with the Greek text, and with Beza's, the Genevan, and the Rhemish Examples of words derived from the Rhemish Version have been given already, but the use of this version is so remarkable that it may be well to add more unequivocal proofs of its reality. Thus in the Epistle to the Romans the following phrases are found which are common, I believe, to the Rhemish and Authorised Versions alone; and it is impossible that the coincidences can have been accidental¹.

A still more certain proof of the influence of the Rhemish Version (Vulgate) on A. V. is found in changes of words and phrases in the earlier version which had been objected to by Romish controversialists. Thus, among renderings identical with, if not adopted from, those of the Rhemish Version in passages objected to by Martin, the following may be mentioned:

Matt. ii. 6 rule.

Thus about seven changes are due to Beza (12, 14, 20) or the Genevan version (1, 7, 13, 16); nearly an equal number to the Rhemish (2, 4, 10, 11, 15, 21); two were perhaps suggested by Tremellius' version of the Syriac (5, 20); and seven are original, reckoning three linguistic variations (3, 6, 17).

The chief influence of the Rhemish Version was on the vocabulary of the revisers, that of Beza and INTERNAL the Genevan Version on the interpretation. But still our revisers exercise an independent judgment both in points of language and construction. Thus in the latter respect they often follow Beza, rightly and wrongly, when the Genevan Versions do not; and again they fail to follow him where these had rightly adopted his rendering. In the former class such passages as these occur:

Mark xi. 17 called of all nations.

ab omnibus gentibus (Beza).

Rom. vii. 6 that being dead wherein... mortuo eo in quo... (Beza).

Hebr. xi. 13 and embraced them. postquam et amplexi fuissent (Beza).

I John ii. 19 they went out that...

egressi sunt ex nobis ut... (Beza).

On the other hand the Authorised Version retains (by no means unfrequently) the old rendering of the Great Bible when it had been rightly corrected from Beza in the Genevan revisions:

Matt. xxviii. 14 if this come to the governor's ears. come before the governor (Gen.)

periculum erat ne milites apud Pilatum deferrentur (Beza note).

hardness (Gen.)
obdurationem (Beza).

1 Pet. i. 17 If ye call on the Father...

If...ye call him Father... (Gen.)

Si patrem cognominatis eum qui... (Beza).

And still further, some right renderings of Beza are neglected both by the Genevan revisers and by our own:

Mark vii. 4 tables.

lectorum (Beza: so Vulg.: beds Wycl. and Rh.).

2 Tim. vi. 5 that gain is godliness.

quæstui esse pietatem (Beza)1.

Archbp. Trench, to whom I owe the references to most of the examples just given, has collected some very instructive instances of improvements (p. 121): Hebr. iv. 1: Acts xii. 19 (Beza's note): John i. 3, 4: Acts i. 4 (Beza); and striking phrases (p. 37):

Acts iii. 15; Hebr. ii. 10; xii. 1. The list might easily be increased. It is unfortunate that Archbp. Trench, like many other writers, confounds the Genevan Testament of 1557 with the New Testament of the Genevan Bible.

If we apply the same test as before and ex- CHAP. amine the sources of the various renderings given INTERNAL in St Mark, the same authorities, as we have already noticed, reappear, and not disproportion-various ately distributed. in St Mark.

Thus of the thirty-seven alternative renderings nearly one-half agree with the Genevan version (2, 7, 10, 11, 24, 26, 33, 37) or Beza's (3, 4, 16—18, 20, 21, 26, 32); six agree with the Rhemish version (1, 6, 14, 22, 23, 25); three more or less with the French (3, 5, 13); six with the earlier English versions; one with Castalio (12); and one with the Vulgate (9).

Once again: the examination of the first Epistle General review of St John will shew very fairly how far K. James' 1 John. revisers generally availed themselves in the New Testament of earlier labours and how far they impressed a special character upon the Version. In six (four) places, if I reckon rightly, they have altered the construction of the text:

- i. 3 'and truly our fellowship is with...'
 for 'that our fellowship may be with...'
- (ii. 19 'they went out that they might be...' so Beza)

(ii. 29 'ye know that...' B.)

CHAP. III. INTERNAL HISTORY. for 'know ye that...' so marg. 'ye have known' (G.)

-iii. 16 'Hereby perceive we the love of God, because...' (B.)

for 'hereby perceive we (have we perceived G.) love, that (because Great Bible)...

iv. 17 'Herein is our love (love with us marg. so B.) made perfect, that...'

for 'Herein is the love perfect in us, that...'

v. 6 'This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ...' (so B.)

for 'This Jesus Christ is he that came...' (Tyndale, G. B.)

or 'This is that Jesus Christ that came...' (G.)

The changes of words are far more frequent, and of these a large number introduce phrases identical with those used in the Rhemish Version. Examples occur i. 9 confess for [ac]knowledge: ii. 2 (iv. 10) 'he is the propitiation for...' for 'he it is that obtaineth grace for...' iv. 10 'to make agreement for...' (propitiatio Vulg.): ii. 17 'he that doeth...' for 'he that fulfilleth...': ii. 20 'an unction' for 'an ointment': ii. 26 seduce for deceive (seducunt Vulg.): ii. 28 (iii. 21, v. 14) 'have confidence' for 'be bold' (habeamus fiduciam Vulg.): iii. 15 murderer for manslayer: v. 20 'an understanding that...' for 'a mind CHAP. to...' (sensum ut cognoscamus Vulg.)1.

INTERNAL In other cases the revisers aimed at a more literal exactness, as in iii. 14 have passed for are translated: iv. 18 'made perfect' for 'is perfect': iii. I bestowed for shewed: iii. 9 'doth not commit sin' for 'sinneth not': iii. 6, 22 (article): v. 9, 10 (tense); or at consistency of rendering, as ii. 27 abideth (dwelleth): iii. 10 manifest (known)1; or at clearness, as ii. 24, iii. 8 'that he might destroy the works of the devil' for 'to loose...' (iv. 3, v. 16); or at emphasis, as ii. 3 do know... Once an unhappy combination of renderings is attempted, ii. 17 'Bowels of compassion...' (Bowels Rh. compassion Tynd. &c.): once a neater word is introduced, iii. 3 purifieth (purgeth)3.

- 1 Other coincidences are found: ii. 8 which thing ... ii. 9 until now ... ii. 10 occasion of stumbling (marg. scandal): (ii. 5): iv. 15 shall confess.
- 2 The converse change of 'record' to 'witness' in v. 8 is quite inexplicable.
- 3 The substitution of 'torment' for 'painfulness' in v. 18 is less completely successful: neither word renders κόλασις.

The scrupulous and watchful care with which the revisers worked is nowhere seen more remarkably than in their use of italics to mark the introduction of words not directly represented in the original. The detail may seem at first sight trivial, and Luther neglected it entirely; but in reality it involves much that is of moment. It is of importance as marking distinctly that the work is a translation; and yet more the use distinguishes CHAP. IIL

This analysis, in which I have endeavoured to INTERNAL include all the variations introduced into the Authorised Version, will shew better than any description the watchful and far-reaching care with which the revisers fulfilled their work. No kind of emendation appears to have been neglected; and almost every change which they introduced was an improvement. They did not in every case carry out the principles by which they were generally directed; they left many things which might have been wisely modified; they paid no more attention than was commonly paid in their time to questions of reading1: but when every deduction is made for inconsistency of practice and inadequacy of method, the conclusion yet remains absolutely indisputable that their work issued in a version of the Bible better-> in many cases an interpretation from a rendering: e.g. Hebr. x. 38. This question has been exhaustively treated by Dr Turton in his pamphlet on The Text of the English Bible (1833), who shews conclusively that the Cambridge text of 1638 bears clear marks of representing very exactly the true form of the Authorised Revision. In the use of italics it is far more consistent than the editions of 1611, which seem have been hastily printed.

¹ I have given an account of the Greek text followed by the revisers in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, II. 524 II. But the question is of no real importance, as they do not appear to have been influenced by any consistent critical views, and the variations are too superficial to admit a general classification or discussion.

because more faithful to the original—than any CHAP. TTT. which had been given in English before.

INTERNAL HISTORY.

¹ It is impossible to enter here upon the question of the language of the Authorised Version. Linguistic changes were common in each successive revision as has been already noticed; but it does not at once follow that no archaisms were retained. The following examples of old words contained in the Genevan Bible and altered in A. V. are interesting. I am indebted for them to an anonymous Essay called English retracted (Cambridge, 18-) which contains many excellent criticisms on the English of the Genevan Version. The readings of A. V. are given in (). The other notation is as before.

HISTORY. above, Tit. i. 8.

The valuable Bible Word-Book (1866) of Mr Eastwood and Mr Aldis Wright furnishes an admirable foundation for a study of the English of A. V. There can hardly be a more instructive lesson in English than to trace to their first appearance a number of the archaisms there noticed. It will appear that not a few of them are due to K. James' revisers themselves and not to the earlier texts. The charges brought by the Rhemists against the language of the earlier English Versions are all summed up by Martin and met by Fulke, Defence of the English translations, pp. 218, 569 (ed. P. S.). The argument of Martin, it will be seen, loses all its point, when applied to the Authorised Version.

CONCLUSION.

THUS step by step and in slow degrees, under The Prayer Book conevery variety of influence, the English Bible as-tains traces sumed its present shape; and the record of its stages of translaprogress is still partially shewn in our public ser-tion. vices. Among its other manifold memorials of the past, the Book of Common Prayer preserves clear traces of this eventful history. Some of the scriptural translations which it contains are original. some are from the Great Bible, some from the Authorised Version. The Offertory sentences and the comfortable words' are not taken from any version, but are a rendering of the Latin, made probably by Cranmer. The same independence is found Original in the Evangelic Hymns, the Benedictus, the Magni-from the ficat and the Nunc dimittis, which differ more or less from the Great Bible and the Authorised Version. But even here the labour of correction was not neglected; for after their introduction into the first Prayer-Book of 1548 these Hymns were elaborately revised in 1549 and again in 1552. So also the Benedicite was revised in 1549 and the burden of the Hymn was altered throughout in 1552.

Passages from the Great Bible. The Psalms Venite, Jubilate, Cantate, Deus misereatur, agree almost literally with the Great Bible (April 1540), though even in these there are traces of a minute and careful revision; and the same remark holds true also of the Psalms in the Occasional Services.

The Psalter. But the great and enduring monument of the earlier Version of Coverdale and Cranmer is the Psalter itself, which had, as we have seen, become so completely identified with the expression of religious feeling that it was felt to be impossible to displace it. When the last changes in the Prayer-Book were made it was found, it is said, smoother to sing; but this is not a full account of the matter, and it cannot be mere familiarity which gives to the Prayer-Book Psalter, with all its errors and imperfections, an incomparable tenderness and sweetness. Rather we may believe that in it we can yet find the spirit of him whose work it mainly is, full of humility and love, not heroic or creative, but patient to accomplish by God's help the task which

Ps. cxvi. 4 (The Churching of Women) 'I found,' 'I called' for 'I shall find,' and 'I will call.'

¹ Two changes of tense are worthy of notice. In the Cantate (Ps. xcviii. 9) 'he cometh' is read for 'he is come;' and in

had been set him to do, and therefore best in harmony with the tenour of our own daily lives.

But when the Psalter and the Hymns were Passages from the left unaltered in 1662 the Introductory Sentences, Authorised Version. and the Epistles and Gospels were at last taken from the Authorised Version. Up to that time the Epistles and Gospels had been printed from the Great Bible with a few, perhaps unintentional, discrepancies, and the Introductory Sentences, like those at present in the Communion Service, had been an original translation. Thus the cycle was completed, and each great stage in the history of our Bible represented in the Prayer-Book.

Whatever else may be thought of the story Historic character. which has been thus imperfectly told, enough has istics of the been said to shew that the history of the English Scriptures is, as was remarked by anticipation, unique. The other great vernacular versions of Europe are the works of single men, definitely stamped with their impress and bearing their names. A German writer somewhat contemptuously remarks that it took nearly a century to accomplish in England the work which Luther achieved in the fraction of a single life-time. The reproach is exactly our glory. Our version is the work of a Church and not of a man. Or rather it is a growth and not a work. Countless external influences, independent of the actual translators, contributed to mould it; and when it was fashioned the Christian instinct of the nation, touched, as we believe, by the Spirit of God, decided on its authority. But at the same time, as if to save us from that worship of the letter, which is the counterfeit of true and implicit devotion to the sacred text, the same original words are offered to us in other forms in our Prayer-Book, and thus the sanction of use is distinguished from the claims to finality. Our Bible in virtue of its past is capable of admitting revision, if need be, without violating its history. As it gathered into itself, during the hundred years in which it was forming, the treasures of manifold labours, so it still has the same assimilative power of life.

Compared with the Vulgate.

One Version only in old times, the Latin Vulgate, can in this respect be compared with it. This also was formed by private efforts silently and slowly till it was acknowledged by the acceptance of the Western Church. One supremely great man, Jerome, partly revised and partly renewed it, and by a strange coincidence even he could not displace the old Psalter which had been adopted for public use. But the English Bible has what the Latin Bible, as far as we know, had not. It Crowned has not only the prerogative of vitality while the dom. other has been definitely fixed in one shape, but it has also the seal of martyrdom upon it. In this too it differs from the other great modern versions. Luther defied his enemies to the last. Lefèvre in extreme old age mourned that when the opportunity was given him he had not been found worthy to give up his life for Christ. Calvin died sovereign at Geneva. But Tyndale, who gave us our first New Testament from the Greek, was strangled for his work at Vilvorde: Coverdale, who gave us our first printed Bible, narrowly escaped the stake by exile: Rogers, to whom we owe the multiform basis of our present Version, was the first victim of the Marian persecution: Cranmer, who has left us our Psalter, was at last blessed with a death of triumphant agony.

The work was crowned by martyrdom and the Words of the transworkmen laboured at it in the faith and with the lators. love of martyrs. The solemn words in which they commend the Bible to their readers, the prayers which they offer for the spiritual enlightenment of their countrymen, the confessions which they make of their own insufficiency, have even now lost nothing of their eloquence. These are the moral of the story.

CRANMER.

'Every man,' writes Cranmer, 'that cometh to 'the reading of this holy Book ought to bring with 'him first and foremost [the] feare of almighty 'God, and then next a firm and stable purpose to 'reform his own self according thereunto, and so 'to continue, proceed and prosper from time to 'time, shewing himself to be a sober and a fruitful 'hearer and learner, which if he shall do he shall 'prove at length well able to teach, though not 'with his mouth, yet with his living and good 'example, which is sure the most lively and effectuous form and manner of teaching.'

COVER-DALE. 'As for the commendation of God's holy Scrip'ture,' writes Coverdale, 'I would fain magnify it
'as it is worthy, but I am far insufficient thereto
'and therefore I thought it better for me to hold
'my tongue than with few words to praise or com'mend it; exhorting thee, most dear reader, so to
'love it, so to cleave unto it, and so to follow it in
'thy daily conversation, that other men seeing thy
'good works and the fruits of the Holy Ghost in 'thee may praise the Father of heaven and give
'this word a good report, for to live after the law
'of God and to lead a virtuous conversation is the greatest praise that thou canst give unto his doc-'trine.....'

'I have here translated,' writes Tyndale, and TYNDALE. these were his first words, 'brethren and sisters,' 'most dear and tenderly beloved in Christ, the 'New Testament for your spiritual edifying, con-'solation and solace; exhorting instantly and be-'seeching those that are better seen in the tongues 'than I, and that have higher gifts of grace to in-'terpret the sense of the Scripture and meaning of 'the Spirit than I, to consider and ponder my 'labour and that with the spirit of meekness; and 'if they perceive in any places that I have not 'attained the very sense of the tongue or meaning' of the Scripture, or have not given the right Eng-'lish word, that they put to their hands to amend' 'it, remembering that so is their duty to do. For we have not received the gifts of God for our-'selves only or for to hide them; but for to bestow 'them unto the honouring of God and Christ and 'edifying of the congregation which is the Body of 'Christ.'

'It remaineth that we commend thee [gentle Preface to Authorised reader] to God and to the Spirit of His Grace, Version.

think. He removeth the scales from our eyes, 'the vail from our hearts, opening our wits that 'we may understand His word, enlarging our 'hearts, yea correcting our affections, that we 'may love it above gold and silver, yea that we 'may love it to the end. Ye are brought unto 'fountains of living water which ye digged not; 'do not cast earth into them with the Philistines, 'neither prefer broken pits before them with the 'wicked Jews. Others have laboured, and you 'may enter into their labours. O receive not so 'great things in vain: O despise not so great salvation.....It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God; but a blessed thing it is 'and will bring us to everlasting blessedness in 'the end, when God speaketh unto us, to hearken; 'when He setteth His word before us, to read it: 'when He stretcheth out His hand and calleth, to 'answer, Here am I, here we are to do Thy will, 'O God. The Lord work a care and conscience in 'us to know Him and serve Him, that we may be 'acknowledged of Him at the appearing of our 'Lord JESUS CHRIST, to whom with the Holy 'Ghost, be all praise and thanksgiving. Amen.'

APPENDIX III.

Collation of I John in the first, second, and third editions of Tyndale's New Testament.

The reading of the second edition of Tyndale (T_2 , APP. III. 1534) is given first: that for which it is substituted is the reading of the first edition (T_1 , 1525). Where the reading of the third edition (T_3 , 1535) is not specified it agrees with T_2 . When the reading of T_3 alone is given T_1 and T_2 agree against it.

- i. I om. 'declare we unto you' after 'beginning' (I) T₃ om. 'concerning' before 'which' (33). So Matthew.
 - 4 'our joy' for 'your joy' (2)
 - 7 'Jesus Christ' for 'Christ' (3)
 - 8 'if we say' for 'if we shall say' (4)
- ii. 1 'sin not' for 'should not sin' (5)
 - 'if-yet' for 'and if-yet' (6)
 - 2 T_a 'your sins' for 'our sins' (34). Not Matthew.
 - 3 'we are sure' for 'we know' (7)
 - 'know him' for 'have known him' (8)
 - 5 'thereby' for 'therein' (9)
 - 9 'the light' for 'the true light' (10)

APP. III.

- II T_a 'the darkness' for 'that darkness' (35). So Matthew.
- 13 T₃ 'ye know' twice for 'ye have known' and so v. 14 (36). So Matthew.
- 17 T_a abideth ever' for abideth for ever' (37) So Matthew.
- 21 T₃ 'know not' for 'knew not' (Matthew) (38)
- 22 'the same is the Antichrist' for 'he is Antichrist' (11)
- iii. I 'knoweth not him' for 'hath not known him' (12)
 - T, 'on to us' for 'on us' (Matthew) (39)
 - 2 'doth not appear' for 'hath not appeared' (13)
 - 4 'for sin is' for 'and sin is' (14)
 - 11 'that we should' for 'that ye should' which is also in T₂ (15)
 - 15 T_a 'hate' for 'hateth' (Matthew) (40)
 - 16 'and therefore' for 'and' (16)
 - 'ought we' for 'we ought' (17)
 - 17 'have need' for 'in necessity' (18)
 - 18 T_s 'with the deed' for 'with deed' (41). So Matthew.
 - 19 'for thereby' for 'and hereby' (19)
 - 'can before him quiet our hearts' for 'will before him put our hearts out of doubt' (20)
 - 20 'But' for 'for' (21)
 - 21 'Beloved' for 'tenderly beloved': comp. iv. 1, 7, 11 (22)
 - 24 'thereby' for 'hereby' (23)
- iv. 1 'Ye beloved' for 'Dearly beloved' (24)
 - T₃ ' or not' for ' or no' (42). So Matthew.
 - 3 T_s 'that confesseth' for 'which confesseth' (43). So Matthew.
 - 5 'and therefore' for 'therefore' (25)

- T₃ 'that world' for 'the world' (Matthew) (44) App. III. 5
- 'Beloved' for 'Dearly beloved' so iv. 11 (26)
- 'knoweth not' for 'hath not known' (27)
- 20 'hate' for 'hateth' (28)
- 'for how' for 'how' (29)
- [T_a 'that Jesus Christ' for 'Jesus is Christ' V. I (Matthew) (45)
 - 7 'for there'...' are one.' In smaller type and in brackets. In T₃ the words are in (). In the first edition no difference is marked (30)
 - 'For' for 'And' (31)
 - 15 'desire' for 'desired' (32)

In this list 1, 4, 5, 10, 11, 18, 22, 24, 26, 29 are closer renderings of the Greek text.

On the other hand 6, 9, 14, 16, 19, 21, 22, 25, 31 are instances of the abandonment of the more literal renderings in order (as it seems) to bring out the argument with greater distinctness.

The agrist which was first rendered by a perfect form is rendered by an indefinite present in 8, 12, 13, 27: a mode of rendering adopted for the perfect in 32. The first change in 7 seems to be a consequence of the second to avoid repetition.

An error of grammar is corrected in 28, and an improvement of rhythm is introduced in 17.

Two false readings are corrected in 3, 15; and a new reading adopted in 2. The spurious passage in v. 7 is marked (30).

The changes are more frequently away from Luther than to Luther; but it is impossible not to think that Luther suggested the longest change of rendering (20), for which he has 'dass wir-können unser Herz vor ihm stillen.'

APP. III.

Of the renderings first introduced in 1535 three are improved translations (33, 35, 38): two are worse renderings for emphasis (41, 44): one is a false reading (34): one is a substitution (as before) of an indefinite present for a perfect (36): two appear to be indifferent (42, 43): four are probably misprints (37, 39, 40, 45).

In the Epistle to the Ephesians the changes generally are of the same character. Two of these very worthy of notice have influenced our present text, of which one is the singularly beautiful 'making melody in your hearts' (v. 19) for 'playing': and the other the strange substitution of 'which before believed in Christ' (i. 12) for 'before hoped in Christ' which is altered into 'trusted' in A. V.

Thus of the whole number (55) of alternative renderings only five (4, 28, 32, 34, 37) cannot be referred directly to their source; and of the corresponding readings adopted in the text only two (24, 32). Of APP. IV. these one alternative reading (28) is very remarkable and may have come from the Zurich glosses which I have been unable to see. Of the other alternative readings ten (3, 5, 10, 43, 47-50, 54, 55) agree with Luther: sixteen (1, 2, 8, 11, 12, 13, 16, 24—6, 33, 35, 38-9, 42, 46) with the Zurich version: ten with Pagninus (18, 15, 21-3, 30-1, 36, 40-1): six with the Vulgate (6, 7, 14, 18-20); and six with Tyndale (9, 44-5, 51-3). Of these the most remarkable coincidences with Luther are 3, 10, 47, 54, 55, with the Zurich Version, 8, 42, with Pagninus 16, 31, with Tyndale 9, 52, 53. Of the readings adopted the most singular are 17 (Luther) and 10, 10, 20 (Zurich).

Nothing could sum up the internal history of Coverdale's Bible more accurately than this analysis.

Tyndale, 1525. Trouble is the daily labour. He will it be enough that we labour daily without further care.

vi. 34.

Tyndale, 1534. None.

Matthew. It is commanded us in the sweat of our face to win our bread: that travail must we daily, diligently, and earnestly do, but not be careful what profit shall come unto us thereof, for that were to care for tomorrow. We must therefore commit that to God, which is ready to prosper our labours with His blessing, and that abundantly, so that most shall we profit when we are least careful.

x. 42.

Tyndale, 1525. Compare deed to deed, so is one greater than another; but compare them to God, so are they all like, and one as good as another; even as the spirit moveth a man, and time and occasion giveth.

APPENDIX VIII.

Mr Froude's history of the English Bible.

App.VIII. Mr Froude in his history of the reign of Henry VIII.

is necessarily led to speak of the work of Tyndale, and so generally of the early history of the English Bible.

As he has lent the support of his brilliant narrative to a surprising series of errors, it seems worth while to examine his account in detail. For the evidence of the facts which are stated in correction of his assertions I must refer to the earlier part of the volume.

Ι.

Before entering on the history of Tyndale's version Mr Froude gives a summary notice of the English versions existing in his time. The paragraph is a significant warning of what is to follow: 'Before the Reformation two versions existed of the Bible in English—'two certainly, perhaps three. One was Wicliffe's; and other based on Wicliffe's, but tinted more strongly with the peculiar opinions of the Lollard's (sic), followed at the beginning of the fifteenth century; and there is 'said to have been a third, but no copy of this is known App. VIII. 'to survive, and the history of it is vague'.'

Of these five statements only one is strictly true, that there were two English versions of the Bible before the Reformation, and even this is obscured by the hypothetical addition of a third version. Wycliffe's own work, as we have seen, extended only to the New Testament, and (perhaps) to part of the Old. Purvey's revision was completed in the 14th century. The doctrinal differences (as far as I have seen) between the two Wycliffite versions are purely imaginary. The 'history' of the third is not only vague but absolutely baseless.

The history of the Wycliffite versions is extremely obscure, and till the great edition of Forshall and Madden appeared it was practically unknown. But Tyndale's life is written very distinctly in his works, and in these Mr Froude may be expected to find himself at home, for there are no more characteristic records of the time. Thus then it is that he tells the translator's story. 'Thither [to Wittenberg] came also from Eng-'land, which is here our chief concern, William Tyndal, 'a man whose history is lost in his work and whose 'epitaph is the Reformation. Beginning life as a rest-'less Oxford student he moved thence to Cambridge, 'thence to Gloucestershire to be tutor in a knight's when he wanders into bye-ways, should know how to choose his guides. Lewis' was an admirable work for the time when it was written (ed. 2, 1739); but his materials for the early history of the Bible were wholly inadequate.

iii. p. 77. The single reference is to 'Lewis's History of the English Bible.' I have not thought it worth while to trace Mr Froude's errors to their source. Most of them may come from Lewis, but a historian, even

App. VIII. 'family, and there hearing of Luther's doings and expressing himself with too warm approval to suit his 'patron's conservatism (Wood's Athena Oxonienses) he 'fell into disgrace.'

The legendary visit to Wittenberg will be noticed afterwards. For the rest Tyndale 'was brought up 'from a child in the University of Oxford,' according to the only evidence which remains, and continued there till he was about thirty, no great proof of restlessness. There is again no reason to suppose that the beginning of his work was in any way due to the influence of Inther; and, on the other hand, the single indication of the date of the first public expression of his reforming zeal is anterior to the final breach of Luther with the Pope, when as yet the Saxon reformer's name would be unknown in England. Nor did Tyndale afterwards, as far as we know, 'express himself with too warm ap-'proval' of Luther's opinions. But even if he did so, so far was Sir John Walsh (his 'patron') from being displeased with Tyndale, that he evidently defended him against the priests, who complained that 'he bare 'himself bold of the gentlemen then in that country.' And in the end Tyndale left his family at his own request: 'Sir,' he said, 'I perceive that I shall not be 'suffered to tarry long here in this country; neither shall 'you be able, though you would, to keep me out of the 'hands of the spirituality; and also what displeasure 'might grow thereby to you by keeping me, God 'knoweth; for the which I should be right sorry.'

Thus nothing is true in this paragraph but the general statement that Tyndale was successively at Oxford, Cambridge, and in Gloucestershire. All the details are incorrect and misleading. 'From Gloucestershire,' the history continues, 'he removed to London, where Cuth-

'bert Tunstall had lately been made bishop, and from APP. VIII. 'whom he looked for countenance in an intention to 'translate the New Testament. Tunstall showed little 'encouragement to this enterprise, but a ... London 'alderman, Humfrey Monmouth by name, hearing the 'young dreamer preach on some occasion at St Dun-'stan's, took him to his home for half a year and kept 'him there.'

The first sentence offers no subject for remark. The second is more noticeable. Tunstall civilly refused Tyndale's application to be admitted into his household, but he was not informed of his ultimate design, to which therefore he shewed no 'encouragement,' great or 'little.' Munmouth says that he heard Tyndale 'preach two or 'three sermons,' and after that met him. The 'young 'dreamer' was by this time not far short of forty, and as far from dreaming as Luther himself.

'The half year being past, Monmouth gave him ten 'pounds, with which provision he went off to Witten-'berg. ... Tyndal saw Luther, and under his immediate 'direction translated the Gospels and Epistles while at 'Wittenberg.'

The history now becomes important. The 'confe-'deracy' of Tyndale with Luther at Wittenberg is affirmed by Sir T. More, and even by Foxe. On the other side there is the simple statement of Tyndale: 'When he '[More] saith Tyndale was confederate with Luther, that 'is not truth.' Further, it has been shewn that Tyndale's and Luther's translations are generically distinct. And once again the deposition of Munmouth affirms that Tyndale went from London to Hamburgh, and 'within 'a year after' sent still from Hamburgh for a second ten pounds which he had left in Munmouth's hands. It is scarcely worth while to observe that the Acts and the App. VIII. Apocalypse are omitted in the description of Tyndale's translation.

'Thence [from Wittenberg] he returned to Antwerp, and settling there under the privileges of the city he was joined by Joy, who shared his great work with him. Young Frith from Cambridge came to him also, and Barnes and Lambert...In Antwerp under the care of these men was established the printing press,...[and there] Tyndal's Testament was first printed...'

This paragraph is the most unfortunate of all. Tyndale 'returns' to a place which he had not visited before: is 'joined' by Fryth who did not leave England till a year after: and receives as a colleague the man whose chief claim to remembrance is Tyndale's indignant disclaimer of his tampering with the text of his New Testament in an edition published in 1534. The printing of Tyndale's Testament was, as has been seen, begun at Cologne and finished at Worms. His amanuensis was W. Roye; and there is no evidence, as far as I can find, that Tyndale was at Antwerp till some time afterwards.

The details which are subsequently added complete the sum of error. Tyndale we read 'in the year 1526 'achieved and printed the first edition of his New 'Testament [at Antwerp].' The fact is that he completed two editions at Worms in 1525. 'Three editions 'were sold before 1530, and in that year a fresh instalment was completed.' The fact is that five if not six editions had been issued before that date. What follows is still more surprising:

'The Pentateuch was added to the New Testament, 'and afterwards by Tyndal himself, or under Tyndal's 'eyes, the historical books, the Psalms and Prophets. 'At length the whole canon was translated and pub'lished in separate portions.' The date at which this APP.VIII. result was obtained is given by implication. In 1534

Cranmer, we are told, as a step to an authorized version of 'the Bible,' 'divided Tyndal's work into ten parts, 'sending one part to each bishop to correct.'

All of Tyndale's work which was published at the time of his martyrdom was, as we have seen, the New Testament, the Pentateuch, the Book of Jonah, and a few fragments-' the Epistles from the Old Testament'taken from the Sarum Breviary. It is probable that he had completed a translation of the historical books, but there is not the least foundation for the statement that 'the Psalms and Prophets' were translated by him or under his eyes; nor for the piecemeal publication of the books; since the exceptional Book of Jonah was really an appendage to the Preface by which it was accompanied. The scheme of Cranmer belongs to the year 1535, and there is nothing but a conjecture of Strype (or Foxe) to extend to the Old Testament what was originally designed for the New Testament. 'He 'began,' Strype says quoting Foxe, 'with the translation 'of the New Testament,...and the same course no ques-'tion he took with the Old Testament.' The little which is certainly known of the work is entirely opposed to the notion; and in fact at that time there was no English version but Wycliffe's available for the purpose of distribution.

Tyndale's work having been thus singularly amplified, a new version is given of its subsequent fate. 'Finally,' and this is indeed the climax of the narrative, 'the king's 'patience was exhausted. The legitimate methods having been tried in vain, he acted on his own responsi-

App. VIII. 'bility. Miles Coverdale...silently went abroad with a 'licence from Cromwell; with Tyndal's help he collected and edited the scattered portions; and in 1536 there 'appeared in London, published cum privilegio and de-'dicated to Henry VIII., the first complete copy of the 'English Bible. The separate translations still anoma-'lously prohibited in detail were exposed freely to sale 'in a single volume under the royal sanction.'...' Equally 'remarkable [with the Preface] and even more emphatic 'in the recognition of the share in the work borne by 'the king was the frontispiece. This was divided into 'four compartments...In the third compartment Cranmer 'and Cromwell were distributing the Bible to kneeling priests and laymen...the people were shouting, "Vivat 'rex!-Vivat rex!" children who knew no Latin lisping, "God save the King," and at the extreme left, at a gaol 'window, a prisoner was joining in the cry of delight, as 'if he too were delivered from a worse bondage.'

The one certain fact in this elaborate and striking passage is that a Bible prepared by Coverdale appeared in London in 1536 dedicated to Henry VIII. All the rest is hypothetical or false. The king certainly took no active part in the production of Coverdale's Bible. Coverdale may have received a license from Crumwell, but he would not need it at Zurich or Frankfort. Bible was not composed of the collected fragments of Tyndale's work, but was substantially a new version in the whole of the Old Testament and a thorough revision in the New. There is not the slightest reason to suppose that Tyndale helped in making it. It was not printed cum privilegio or like the Southwark edition of 1537, and Matthew's 'with the king's most gracious license.' It was not made up of parts prohibited in detail. The frontispiece described does not belong to

it. By an almost incredible series of errors three dis-APP. VIII. tinct Bibles are confounded together, and the result is a piece of bibliography probably without parallel. Coverdale's Bible was published in 1535-6, and dedicated with the Preface quoted to Henry VIII. Matthew's Bible was published in 1537 with the King's most gra-'cious license,' and contained Tyndale's Pentateuch and New Testament separately proscribed. Crumwell's Bible was published in 1539 and is decorated with the remarkable frontispiece, which is adapted in the historian's description to a volume not much more than half the size. A kind of fatality follows Mr Froude to the last. The striking sentiment with which the description concludes finds no support in the design itself. The two prisoners alone do not 'join in the cry of delight,' and it seems as if the artist intended to represent in them the just punishment of the disloyal impugners of the king's supremacy.

It seems needless as it would be most distasteful to add any further comment on the strange narrative which under the authority of the historian of the Tudors is likely to be for most Englishmen the popular story of the Bible. The subject and the author will, I hope, suggest a sufficient apology for what has been already written. Errors which may be safely left unnoticed when they are hidden in technical or obscure essays gain a fresh significance when they are ratified, without reference to any secondary authority, by a writer whose reputation rests no less on original research than on an impressive style. So it is that history is most fatally corrupted. It is a more pleasing task to do justice to the true imaginative insight—it would be affectation to

App. VIII. suppose that it is more—with which Mr Froude characterizes Tyndale's work. Serious deductions indeed must be made from the literal interpretation of the words: the complementary influence of Coverdale must be combined with that of Tyndale in estimating the character of the English Bible: yet on the whole the passage is an eloquent and noble judgment, even in its exaggeration, not altogether unworthy of a subject where it is pardonable for criticism to lay aside its coldness:

'Of the translation itself, though since that time it 'has been many times revised and altered, we may say 'that it is substantially the Bible with which we are all 'familiar. The peculiar genius—if such a word may be 'permitted-which breathes through it-the mingled 'tenderness and majesty—the Saxon simplicity—the 'preternatural grandeur-unequalled, unapproached in 'the attempted improvements of modern scholars—all 'are here, and bear the impress of the mind of one 'man-William Tyndal. Lying while engaged in that 'great office under the shadow of death, the sword above 'his head and ready at any moment to fall, he worked 'under circumstances alone perhaps truly worthy of the 'task which was laid upon him-his spirit, as it were 'divorced from the world, moved in a purer element than 'common air'.'
